IN THE COMMONS.

this evening Mr. Labouchere gave notice that he would move that the house regrets that the militia have been embodied because it indicates the government's intention to interfere in the Soudan by force of arms.

Sir Edward Hicks Beach (conservative) remed the debate on Sir Stafford Northcote's notion of censure. He called the attention of the house to the fact that the government had not yet attempted to defend the delay that caused Gen. Gordon's death nor say what the vernment's policy would be in the Soudan after the mahdi was overthrown.

inportant and delicate matter.

Mr. Sexton asked Mr. Gladstone to fix a day for the discussion of the question.

Mr. Gladstone said: "You had better wait Mr. John Morley's amendment to the cen' sure motion favoring the evacuation of the Soudan was rejected by 455 to 112.

Lord Hamilton's amendment to Mr. Morley's motion, to the effect that the government had failed to indicate a policy justifying the confidence of parliament or the country, was rejected by 29 to 277. All the Irish members voted against the government.

Lord Hartington said whether the government was defected or not defeated on the pending motion, the expedition for the suppression of the mahdi would be continued. It was due to India to show the vast mohammedan population of that country that England could not be made to retire before the mahdi's fanatical hordes. The government adhered to its pledges, and would not leave the Soudan until its objects had been accomplished. The railroad from Suakim to Berber, he said, would be used for commercial as well as military purposes. He believed the house would not support a policy undertaking the government of a new India in the heart of Africa. All confidence between the government ment and its military advisers would end if the government were compelled to inform the house of the precise measures adopted for the Egyptian campaign.

Sir Stafford Northcote's motion of censure Mr. John Morley's amendment to the cen-

It was simply impossible for the English government to remain in Egypt in face of the existing European antagonism. The whole policy of the government had been to exticate England from her difficulties, and enable her to return to her former state, in which her strength would be greater throughout the world (feeers.)

return to her former state, in which her strength would be greater throughout he world. [Cheers.]

Earl Granville maintained that the preceding government had sown the seeds of the present troubles. He was not surprised that Hismarck had disapproved the present government's policy because neither the preceding nor the present government had adopted Bismarck's advice to annex Egypt. He regretted the fate of Gordon, but declined to accept the odium the opposition sought to cast upon the government. He assured the house of lords that the government was auxious to proceed with vigor in its present policy and to deal with the slave trade in the most effectual way possible. He regarded England's honor as pledged to defend Egypt proper. He said if the Marquis of Salisbury became the head of the government he much doubted whether he (Lord Salisbury) would propose and execute the policy he had propounded. If he did, the country would force him to wriggle out of it at the carliest opportunity.

LONDON, Feb. 27.—The government's majority of fourteen in the division on the censure appointed the cons ryatives. It is the lowest important question. The conservative to 288 by the votes of Goschen and other whigs and twenty-four Irish members. The peace radicals surported the government. The excitement became intense toward the end of the debate when it transpired that a section of whigs and the Parnellites had decided to vote against the government. The report led a number of hesitating radicals to vote against the censure motion, thus saving the govern ent. The house of commons was crowded in every part early in the evening, but the audience thinned somewhat when it appeared the expected Irish scene would not occur. When Lord Hartington rose to speak the result of the division in to 288 by the votes of Goschen and other whigs

THE SHOEBURYNESS EXPLOSION.

Little Extra Force.
London, Feb. 27.—The explosion at Shoe buryness yesterday was caused in a singular manner. Col. Lyon had invented some fuse experiments with them. Gunner Allen undertook to make the attachments between the shells and fuses. He found his first attempt to insert the fuse into the shell very difficult. to insert the fuse into the shell very difficult, and imprudently used too much force and exploded the shell. The explosion knocked seventeen officers and men, who were present to witness the experiment, off their feet. Allen was killed. His arm was torn off and his head nearly severed. The surgeons hoped to save the lives of Col. Strangeways, commandant of the royal school of gunnery, and Col. Lyon, head official of the government laboratory at Woolwich, each of whom appeared strong enough to survive the loss of both legs, but neither proved able to with stand the double amputations, and both expired after the doctors had completed the operations.

A SAD END.

The veteran agriculturist has passed away. Professor George Buckland came England many years ago, and can justly be regarded as the founder of agricultural education in Ontario. As professor of agriculture in University college and the Ontario veterinary college, secretary of the provincial bureau of agriculture, and an old and esteemed member of the council of the Ontario arts and agricultural association, he was generally and favorably known to all engaged in farming pursuits throughout the province, and by these, as well as by the public he so faithfully served, his loss will be deplored.

Deceased died under peculiarly sad circumstances. He was seized with a fit at Yonge and King streets at 9.45 last night. Not knowing his identity or address Policeman Thompson had him removed in a sleigh to police headquarters. The case was seen to be a serious one and Dr. Oldright was summoned, but medical aid was found to be powerless and the old gentleman died in the station at 1 o'clock this morning, his body being afterwards removed home. His age was 81. England many years ago, and can justly be

A BIT AT HOMEOPATHY.

Dr. Richardson Talks for two Hours and a Half.

It was well that Dr. Richardson, when he lectured last night at the Toronto school of medicine on Homeopathy, could not see behind him. The audience that faced him for two hours and a half were well behaved to a legres. But if he had seen poor Dr. Geo. Wright sitting uncomfortably on a hard-bottomed chair just half the size of his rotund Wright sitting uncomfortably on a hardbottomed chair just half the size of his rotund form; and Dr. McFarlane impatiently tugging at his moustache; and Dr. McCollum tyring to keep from looking at his watch; the enthusiastic lecturer would have cut short some of h's jokes, and left out others. Still, despite its length, the lecture created lots of applause and laughter, and the large number of students—amongst whom were not a few "sweet girl (under) graduates"—evinced the utmost appreciation of the doctrines laid down and the arguments advanced for their proof.

The doctor showed an intimate acquaintance with his subject—as far, that is, as the subject can be known. And his humorous description of the "high and low potencies."
his endeavor to explain what the "fifteenhundredth dilu'ions" were, and what was mean by the operation of "olfaction," were greeted with hearty roars of laughter.

Thus doughty opponent of homeopathy did not, apparently, expect to have any fair listeners. He had not once or twice to pause in the utterance of a medical axiom, and occasionally the ardour of his attack called forth no little merriment.

Of the multitudinous arguments and examples which he adduced to show the reasons
of his disbelief in homeopathy it is impossible to make even a synopsis. Dr. Richardson's vehement dislike of the doctrines of Hahnemann is best shown by his strong assertion that, in his opinion, "they were enough to make any man's hair stand, on end." The laughter which followed this femark showed that the thoughts of all were turned to the impossibility of any such phenomenon taking place in the case of the esteemed lecturer h'mself.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of milliners and the dry goods trade generally to the advertisement of Messrs. John Macdonald & Co. in this day's issue of The World, of their opening day on Monday in their millinery, silk and embroidery department. We are informed they have greatly developed this department of their extensive business and have never had before such a large and choicely-selected stock. The well-known great capacity for purchasing and financial strength of the firm gives them a dominating power in angling them to buy cheaply in every place and exactes. We would advise an inspection of the stock by way nerobast, visiting this city. For detailed particulars see advertises ment page.

TOBOGGAN. That hair within my locket, love,
Is golden, yours is grey,
But yet, whene'er I look at it,

Wavelets of silk, but softer silk
Than silk-worm ever spun.
That look brings back the se evening wells
The moonshine of your eyes.
The lifted chin, the parted lips,
Whon I had won my prize.
Fil keep it as a treasure, wife,
Till you and I must part.
But, dear, when I take that long sleep,
Then place it o'er my heart.
