M. A. Phelan, brother of the man murdered in a rallway car near Welland, has taken the body back to Worcester, Mass., for interment.

The fact, proven by the boy David, that the calls from church and from Kate's residence were ordered by me and that I had no practice whatever.

Less than thirty hours before the robbery I was overheard to say to Kate, on bidding her good night, that I would yet have a handsome fee out of Mr. Brown.

In rebuttal I could do very little. I had been alone in my strull on that momentous evening, and therefore could not prove an Thieves visited the stables of John been alone in my stroll on that momentous evening, and therefore could not prove an alibi. Charley Bliss had gone, and I had no witness to prove that I dropped my knife into the lake when we were boating together; he left on an early train on the morning after the robbery, and nobody could tell where he could be found. I could not account for the possession of the money, and all that had been stated by the witnesses as to my conduct and words had been found on the lake abore in that city. Mr. Esdaile was troubled with insomnia.

Two passengers on Thursday evening's train from Montreal to Ottawa refused to be vaccinated by the Ontario health officer, and, in consequence, were arrested and alooke to my counsel; the latter aprang to his feet, and after apologizing to the court and the district attorney for the interruption, asked permission to present an important witness who had just been discovered. The permission was given, and the rough stranger was put upon the stand and sworn.

He gave the name of Moses Dawson, but avered that he was generally known as Mose. When asked what he knew about the case he said:

"I guess I know a good deal about it. Let me see that 'ere knife."

The knife was placed in his hands and he examined it carefully before speaking. For fully two minutes be turned it slowly in his hands, while the stillness of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the room was like that of the solitudes of the room was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the room was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes of the rooms was like that of the solitudes o

Dawson's cross-examination did not weaken his story in the least, and it was confirmed by the evidence of Jones. Light was breaking through the dark cloud.

Stronger and stronger grew the light when Charley Bliss entered the court roesh, advanced to the witness stand and asked to be sworn. He had heard of my approaching marriage from a friend to whom Kate's mother had confided the intelligence. Knowing I was without money he went to see me on that evening to offer a loan which would start the new couple on the matrimonial road. Not finding me at home he entered the office through one of the windows; I had shown him how to raise it; and slipped the money into my desk through a crevice in the lid. He thought I would be surprised when I discovered it there; that he was entirely correct in his supposition nobody can doubt. As before stated he had left town early next morning before the fact of the woherv had become known. In the Certainly there were salty rivulets coursing down many cheeks.

"I submit the case," said the district attorney with a choking voice that left a long hyphen at the end of every syliable of that brief phrase.

"No charge to the jury is necessary," said the gray-hared judge with quite as many hyphens in his enunciation. They seemed to adhere to his husky throat and require a great effort for their expulsion.

In another minute I was free. No, not free, exactly, for I was clasped in Kate's arms and she in mine. Judge, jury and counsel were all around me with congratulations, and the great, crowded room seemed to be whirling like a kaleidoscope. I remark that the kaleidoscope contained brighter colors than are usually observed in that scientific toy.
