THE case of Mrs. Anglin vs. The Great North Western Telegraph Company, was tried by Judge Price on Wednesday, the 16th April, in Chambers, at Kingston, Ont. Plaintiff sued for damages for the non-delivery of a message directed by her to a party in Rochester. The company contended that it was not liable, being only responsible for the delivery of messages within a certain territory. From Buffalo to Rochester the Western Union Company was liable for the forwarding of messages, therefore the Western Union was at fault and it only. Judge Price ruled that the Great North Western was not liable.
