THE QUIET NOOK.

OTTAWA, 3rd May, 1857.

Ma. Entron.

The following, being purely a military affair, may perhaps be interesting to some of your readers :--

On the 1st instant the officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of No. 2 Company -"Ottawa Riffes"-(French Canadians) following the custom of their ancestors in the Lower Canadian country, erected in honour of their Captain, J. B. Turgeon Esqr., and in front of his own residence, a splendid "May pole."

The Company assembled at the Canadian Insn'ute, and, under the command of Lieut. Carrier, marched to their Captain's residence, precoded by their really pleasing band. It was a fine morning and quite early, a little after six, and the strains of martial music fi ating on the morning air, accompanied by the regular and solid tread of armed men-a new and pleasant variety in Ottawa life-disturbed my morning slumbers in rather an agreeable manner, and shing to the window I could not help admiring the fine and soldier like bearing of the en, as they marched past, not with the " Light of Battle willin faces," but evidently very much leaved with themselves, and proud of their uniform, which ortainly looked remarkably well. And I was not the only admirer, for ever and son as they went on their way a door would be partly opened or a shutter thrown elightly back, and a timid glance from some fair maiden would greet the gall-at heart for war prepared, and others where there were no shutters would Catten their fair nears against the panes of glass to get one last lingering peep at this bold and shing rifeman.

The conductors of the different trains on the honour of the flags of England and France Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, took offence last which were proudly floating from the "May the Officer Commanding will direct the men'to week at some new regulation of the Company, 'pole" top-the band playing an appropriate air accordingly struck, and attempted by force to between each volley. Then came a general sastop the running of the trains. The Company lute, the band playing the national author in the Queen. procured the aid of the military, and after the, "Tip top" style. Licut.
