PROTECTING BRITISH INDUSTRIES.

Notwithstanding the stalwart attitude adopted by the British Liberals towards the policy of free imports and their professed faith in the doctrine that cheaper articles of foreign manufacture are preferable to the dearer products of home industries, the government last year passed an act for the purpose of compelling foreign firms to establish factories in the United Kingdom. It took the shape of an amendment to the Patents and Designs Act, and provision is made for the revocation of any British patent where it can be shown that any trade or industry in the United Kingdom is prejudiced by the conditions of the patentee has attached to the patent or by his default. A further and even more instructive provision for Canadian consideration is that which requires foreign patentees who have taken out British patents to work their patents in Britain.

Mr. Lloyd George, the president of the Board of Trade, and a prominent member of the cabinet, recently had the freedom of the City of Cardiff conferred on him—a tribute all the more noteworthy because the city council contains a majority of his political opponents. In thanking the council for the honor done him, Mr. Lloyd George took occasion to declare that the absence of personal animosity in politics was the distinguishing feature of British political life, and proceeded to refer to new Patents Act. What I shall object to," he remarked, "as far as the board of trade is concerned, is any monopoly conferred by British law, being used to the detriment of British industries." Many enquiries, he said, had been received from powerful foreign syndicates as to the government's interpretation of the act, and enquiries had already been made in different parts of the country by foreign firms for sites for building factories.

It is plain that the principle Mr. Lloyd George enunciated is capable of indefinite extension and cannot be restricted to artificial monopolies made by operation of law. Natural monopolies, such as Canada possesses in her pulp wood forests and in her rare minerals, should also be made subservient to the development of home industries. And if as Governor Hughes pointed out in his speech to the New York Republican Club, a protective tariff is essential to the interests of wage earners, in that it makes possible the payment of wages on the scale that maintains a high standard of living, then the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad becomes the fundamental consideration. The measure of protection and encouragement afforded to British industries by the operation of the new Patents Act will undoubtedly strengthen the movement for tariff reform in the United Kingdom.

GERMANS AND BRITISH ART.

International world exhibitions on the scale that their more recent expositions have attained are more remarkable for their stupendous proportions than truly educative, except to those who visit them with a definite object and for specific study. To the ordinary visitor they are bewildering in their multiplicity of interest and distracting by reason of the wholesale catering to the play spirit of mankind. It is a question whether finer and better results would not be obtained by a frequent series of smaller collections restricted to particular branches of art and industry, appealing both to the expert and the plain citizen.

There was recently opened in Berlin a small but select exhibition of the work of English masters of painting. Only sixty odd canvases were hung in the rooms of the Academy of Arts, but they comprise choice examples of Reynolds, Raeburn, Constable and other household names in the history of British art. The exhibition came as a revelation to the untravelled Germans, among whom it has long been an accepted fact that the utilitarian Briton was incapable of creating works worthy to rank alongside the canvases of continental masters.

Art critics, from the Kaiser downward, have ransacked the resources of the language in search of terms of praise and appreciation. Without exception the Berlin press maintain that no interesting exhibition has never been seen in Berlin nor such a superb collection of priceless works of art.

The critic of The National Zeitung wrote that "it fills us with astonishment, and to be honest, with envy, this elevated and exclusive culture which here finds its highest realization," and asked: "When shall we in Germany be so fortunate as to show something similar?" This little exhibition, of pictures, slender in number but rich in artistic quality, has thus brought the German public into closer touch with British genius, and the tribute generously bestowed from the Frank German heart will have its effect in strengthening the growing sympathy that is gradually effacing latter-day animosities.

THE NEW PLANT INOCULATION.

In one of his latest reports, Mr. P. B. MacNamara, Canadian trade commissioner for the Manchester district of England, reports on the valuable scientific discovery made by Prof. Bottomley of King's College, London, recently noticed by The World. According to MacNamara, it will, in all probability, have far-reaching effects on farm and garden practice in the near future, and he describes the process as one extending, by inoculation, the power of absorbing atmospheric nitrogen and fixing it to plants other than the legumes. "The exhaustive soil investigations," he says, "which have been carried out for 35 many years by the United States Department of Agriculture—investigations which took a new turn when the functions of bacteria came to be better understood—leave little doubt that nature is able to, and does, fix atmospheric nitrogen in the soil by other means than that of the leguminosae, but whether this power was thru soil functions or other plants was a problem.

The commissioner reports that tomatoes, cabbages, strawberries and roses have been successfully inoculated with the root nodules which collect and fix the atmospheric nitrogen. This has been accomplished in the field as well as in the laboratory, and in each case with beneficial, cultural results. Prof. Bottomley, he considers, has demonstrated that other cultivated plants than the legumes and the four trees on whose roots these nodules are said to have been once or twice found) have, or can be made to have, the power of fixing nitrogen from the air for the future food of plants. It may be too early to forecast how the discovery will be ultimately applied commercially and practically, but the commissioner concludes, in any case 1908 opens with a very notable and welcome advance in agricultural science.

SCHOOL TEACHERS' SALARIES.

In resolving to ask that the board of education now tackle seriously the question of an equitable scheme of salaries thruout the city schools, the public school principals have taken up a thoroughly reasonable attitude. This matter has been under consideration of the board for some time and has never received the measure of attention it deserves and must receive if due regard is paid to the success of our educational system. It has been dealt with in a perfunctory way and in detail, not on broad and equitable principles. The result is unrest and agitation where there ought to be satisfaction and vigorous application to immediate duty. By procrastinating and tinkering at individual cases the board is rather aggravating discontent than allaying it and is still up against the identical proposition it has been attempting to sidetrack.

As the personnel of the board has remained practically unchanged, it is a reasonable inference that the public recognize increases of salary to be necessary and will sustain whatever comprehensive schedule it deems called for under the stress of what are really metropolitan conditions. Now that a special committee is to consider the question, it should be an instruction to its members to recommend a scheme that will simplify financial requisitions and obviate complaints for a term of years. The suggestion that representatives from each department should be consulted is a good one, and The World would again urge the propriety of framing the salaries of women teachers on the basis of quality of service without sex differentiation, or at the least, without the present unreasonable disparity.

THE CANADIAN BIRKBECK INVESTMENT & SAVINGS CO.

On Wednesday last the directors of the Canadian Birkbeck Investment & Savings Company submitted to the shareholders the usual statement, showing the results of the company's operations for the year ending Dec. 31 last. Their report was of a very satisfactory character and showed the business of the company to be active and its position all the available funds having been fully employed. That sufficient care had been exercised in the granting of loans is shown by the fact that in all save occasional cases, payments of principal and interest by borrowers continued to be made with marked regularity.

The invested assets increased during the year to $1,223,574.64 and the total income, after deducting $27,225.25 apportioned to the sinking fund on loans and the balance carried forward for last year, amounted to $115,266.46. The net income remaining after payment of expenses of management, debenture interest and other charges, was $73,320, accounted for by the usual dividend of 6 per cent., allocation of $8018.42 to credit of accumulative shares, the transfer of $10,000 to the reserve fund and carrying forward the balance of $3806.60 at credit of profit and loss account. Contracts for the erection of a permanent central building public attention has been directed to the fact that the building will be completed during the current year. The report and relative financial statements are published elsewhere in this issue.

WHAT WAS THE SABBATH AND WHOM WAS IT GIVEN TO?

By E. Oliver.

Without having the least desire to share in the human strife and controversy on the question of the Sabbath, I do consider it to be important to know what God's thoughts are on this, as on all other subjects. I ask then the readers' attention, not to my opinion, or the opinions of other men, but to the Word of God.

The first mention of God's rest, "Sabbath," is in Gen. ii, 2-3: "And on the seventh day God ended His work, which he had made; and He rested on the seventh day from all the work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because in it He had rested from all his works which God created and made." The fact that God sanctified it is no proof that it was instituted for man, or even then made known to him. But when we read that the Sabbath was given to Adam or not, it is most certain that Scripture is silent on the subject. But when we read, like all the rest of the ceremonial law, to a shadow of Christ, this Sabbath is not only difficult, but a key to the whole subject.

Now, as the death of Christ is the only way of bringing the sinner into the rest of God, so also, if the Sabbath was given to man, it is a shadow of Christ. Now, as the death of Christ is the only way of bringing the sinner into the rest of God, so also, if the Sabbath was given to man, it is a shadow of Christ. Now, as the death of Christ is the only way of bringing the sinner into the rest of God, so also, if the Sabbath was given to man, it is a shadow of Christ.

"I am the living bread, which came down from heaven. If any man eat of this bread he shall live forever. This is the bread of life, which I have given unto the world, that whosoever eateth of it may never hunger, and whosoever drinketh of it may never thirst." "I am the living bread, which came down from heaven. If any man eat of this bread he shall live forever. This is the bread of life, which I have given unto the world, that whosoever eateth of it may never hunger, and whosoever drinketh of it may never thirst."
