WOMEN'S HOTEL BANS SPOONING

New Allerton House Puts Effective Check on Moonlight Teas on Roof.

(New York Sun)
 It's hot weather to be carrying around an agitated heat, not to mention a ruffled temper, but to the seven hundred guests of the Allerton House, fifty-seventh street and Lexington avenue, there is ample justification for being not only agitated but horribly perturbed. Life, they say, is just one blue law after another.

With the pavements seething beneath one's feet and a breath of air as scarce now as an oyster, it is only natural that New Yorkers have grown accustomed to go as far as heavenward as they may for relief on these summer nights. And the "blue laws" of the Allerton House are no exception. So when the management announced that the opening of the roof garden, elaborately decorated with chairs and sofas for two—there was much rejoicing.

But, alas! the rejoicing as far as the majority were concerned was short lived. For there followed quickly the information that male guests, already prohibited above the mezzanine floor of this feminine sanctuary, were not eligible to get their summer breezes from the Allerton roof, nor might they hope to look at the moon from that advantageous point.

There was an uproar, short, but somewhat effective. That is to say, the rule was slightly modified, much to the disgust of the younger element of the guests and to the lasting horror of the male callers and the amusement of everybody else.

"Pass" for the Roof.

Reginald is no longer barred from the roof, but the alternative is hardly more inviting—to Reginald, at least. Dressed in his best bib and tucker, he presents himself at the desk of the hotel with all the confidence of a quires for Miss Sweet, the young lady on whom he is wishful of making an undying impression, and is directed to the house telephone. All this is very much like any other hotel and his suspicions are not aroused.

Alas! that sweet, childlike confidence is doomed to destruction. After the first bashful greetings are over and comments on the terrific heat have led to the opening Miss Sweet coyly suggests a sojourn to the roof. Reginald is delighted, in fact, thrilled, and is mentally congratulating himself on raving the price of theatre tickets when the blow falls. For, taking him by the hand, figuratively speaking, Miss Sweet leads him to the desk in the main lobby presided over by an army of female. He hesitates a moment and is lost.

"I would like a pass for Mr. Blank," he hears Miss Sweet ask. Every eye in the back of the desk is turned to him with suspicion written plainly in their depths.

"I say... really, you know," he stammers, stalling by a thought that he is being "taken on" somewhere. They ignore his confusion, give him the once over from the point of his blushing brow to the point of his shining boots, and one of the army reluctantly writes out a pass and hands it to Miss Sweet.

"The middle elevator to the roof," she announces coldly.

Pat the Terrible.

"And that is not half of it!" wailed Miss Sweet herself (though that is not her real name, of course), in relating the horrors of the ordeal. "The boy no sooner regained a little of his shattered faith in me and was beginning to get his breath when along came Patrick and I knew right then and there my friendship was at an end."

Pat, it might be explained, is the

HYDRO CURRENT IN GREAT DEMAND IN SMALLER TOWNS

Many Applications Received By N. B. Electric Commission—Benefits of Hydro

Applications are pouring in to the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission for transmission line extensions to many small towns and villages along the St. John and Kennebecasis rivers, the people of this shire and Apohaqui have petitioned the commission to extend the line to them.

Mr. Weston, acting chief engineer of the commission, said yesterday that these applications were being considered and it was hoped that the commission might be able to take some action in regard to them, but that there was such a deluge of applications from many places, it would be impossible for the commission to meet the wishes of the great majority.

There were applications from Belvedere's Point and from Welsford and Mr. Weston said that while it is probable would be possible to extend the line as far as Welsford, it would be impracticable to go any further.

It was planned, he said, to carry the line into Hampton Village and to Hampton Station. The line seems to be fairly regular and reliable, but it is feared the cost of constructing transmission lines would make their extension in this direction out of the question.

The Benefits of Hydro

A lady in the Fair Vale-Gondola Point district, speaking of what the advent of electricity meant to her and probably to her neighbors as well, said: "Now, since the electric current, I can talk with some confidence as to what it has meant to me and to my household. We have all the lights we need—some thirty or forty—from cellar to attic and instead of having to carry a kerosene lamp, which we had to carry from room to room before we had electricity, we can now go where we please and light our way as we go. Of course this is nothing unusual to city people, but I think it is a very great benefit to those who have never lived in the city before."

Colonel Smythe, of Ottawa, representing the Dominion Government, has been in New Brunswick inspecting the roads built under the Federal Aid scheme. He covered the northern and central parts of the province. His trips included St. John to Musquash, St. John to Welsford and Fredericton to Woodville.

The Colonel stated that he was much impressed with the New Brunswick roads and was surprised at the low cost of construction, but that the New Brunswick highways in such splendid condition.

He stated that when he visited New Brunswick he expected to find patchwork on account of the patchwork of the province, but instead he found continuous stretches of splendid gravel roads at a low cost per mile.

Colonel Smythe will leave tonight for Quebec where he will inspect the Quebec highways. He represented an Anglo constituency in the Conservative government.

DEATH READY TO POUNCE ON BOLD ORCHID HUNTERS

Occupation Is One of Most Hazardous Known to Man.

"Fancy that plant being worth $1500!" exclaimed Victor to the Chelsea Flower Show as they pause to glance for a moment at the new orchid, odonto cypripedium, with its stiff, snowy petals spotted with maroon. "Fancy paying all that money for it!"

But orchids are rare for human lives as well as with gold, writes an orchid hunter in The London Express. Of all occupations in the world orchid hunting is the most hazardous. It is a dangerous game, and the orchid hunter is a man who is always on the edge of death.

They are arranged to have another reunion dinner the following year. When the appointed day had come seven of them were dead. The eighth was in a hospital, and stayed there for a year, then sailed for Europe with permanently broken health.

That was unusually hard luck, but every orchid collector knows of many such cases. A collector, a German, who leered at an idol in a Madagascar jungle village, was soaked in oil and burned to death.

You are always on the brink of the grave while you are orchid hunting. Invariably these bizarre, quality-contrasted little blossoms lurk in the unhealthiest depths of the jungle, where fever, snakes, great cats and ambushed savages with poisoned darts combine to wreak vengeance on the fool who violates their privacy.

But orchid hunting is a man's game. We've all got to die one day, and, at all events, we see to it that we do live first. We are up against the real raw stuff of adventure and we do not know the meaning of boredom. It is a life of the most intense excitement.

We may find a rare Dendrobium growing in a modest bush at a hill-top, or we may find a rare orchid growing in a cleft at the top of a ninety-foot tree which our axmen have brought crashing down through the mangroves and banas.

It is a glorious gamble while it lasts.

David G. Manderville, of Derby, Northumberland county, has made an assignment to H. G. Hobbs of Fredericton, authorized trustee. A meeting of creditors has been called. The liabilities are $29,140.25. The assets are $10,028.02.

RUN ERRANDS AND ELEVATORS AS THEY WAIT FOR $4,000,000

Scions of Old Castilian Family Content With Modest Jobs During Legal Battle; Offer of $1,000,000 Refused; Four Sons Employed at Waldorf.

Six scions of one of the richest families of Porto Rico, with the trust of Castilian blood in their veins, are engaged in modest positions in New York while waiting to inherit $4,000,000 that is almost within their grasp.

Four of the sons work at the Waldorf-Astoria, one is a post office clerk and another is employed in a factory at Long Island City.

One of the elevators at the Waldorf is being operated by a bright-looking youth, who said he enjoyed his job. He is Carlos Marini, who some day may be a millionaire. On the early morning elevator shift is his brother, Raoul, Marini earns his living in one of the linen rooms.

With their two brothers, two sisters and their mother, the Marinis live in a humble uptown apartment house and pool their earnings to pay the rent and household expenses. Down at Cabo Rojo, Porto Rico, a half dozen lawyers are involved in the litigation over the estate of the boys' grandfather, one of the wealthiest men of the island.

He stated that when he visited New York one by one since 1921, when he was the eldest son, found employment. They had been unable to get a cent of the money they say is due them pending settlement of several claims and contests. Knowing the financial straits of the family, it is said.

The Marinis had been drifting to New York one by one since 1921, when he was the eldest son, found employment. They had been unable to get a cent of the money they say is due them pending settlement of several claims and contests. Knowing the financial straits of the family, it is said.
