

MIRAMICHI ADVANCE, CHATHAM, NEW BRUNSWICK, MARCH 3, 1892.

A Cardinal Sin.

Allan's eyes blazed. The sanctity of the sick-chamber and Mander's hasty retreat were the only two things that kept him from proceeding to extremities. He sent the nurse to his father, and accompanied Mander until he saw him inside the carriage which he had brought him to Redhill. Then he looked through the window, and said in a voice which made the occupant shudder.

My wife is dangerously ill. If anything happens you know what I will do to you. The carriage drove off, and Allen returned to his father. Mr. Boucherier was not dead—yet he prophesied truly when he said these words would be his last. For some days he lingered, but not again did a syllable pass his lips. The watchers could not say whether he was conscious or unconscious. He had done all he had dared to do in silence. After that, when his stuporous state had passed, he had made even the hardened villain stand aghast, why should a man want to speak again in this world?

So when after two or three days Philip Tremaine, Boucherier's friend and a friend with apparently little pain—those words still remained his last ones. CHAPTER XXVII. JOSEPHINE IS FREED. George Mander, after his departure from Redhill, told the driver to take him to the Reddon Inn. He dismissed his conveyance and bespoke a bedroom and a sitting-room. He was settled upon his new abode until Mr. Boucherier's death made it certain that his plots could be turned to money—the very furniture in the house at Sharp's Bay was settled upon his wife. Even if he could borrow money upon it the amount would be too small to be of any service. For the first time, flight, bootless flight, entered into his head. He was not exactly sure as to the very day on which the forced bill would become due, nor was he clear as to what steps would be taken when its true nature was discovered. His great hope was under Mr. Boucherier would recover, or even partially recover, from his illness. He could not believe he was so near to death. He could not get away from the plucky one he was after all—what a lie he had told! For a moment Mr. Mander felt almost indignant at the success of falsehood. Or he may have felt the eagle struck down by its own feathers from its own plumage.

He must stay near Redhill as long as possible. He decided this over a glass of strong brandy-water, and ratified that decision when many more were taken from the Reddon Inn and having nothing else to do, while waiting, he drank all day long. He had now got past the stage where liquor sends its votaries senseless under the table. He could even continue drinking until he grew what may, in a complimentary sense, be called sober again. In fact, the next warning the brandy would give him would come in the guise of delirium tremens. Meanwhile Allan had been to town. He had found Frances so much better that he was able to return the next day to Redhill, bringing Josephine with him. She was in time to see her father alive, but not to receive the farewell which he had, on a previous occasion, given to the others. She stayed at Redhill, but a few hours, then tore herself away from him to leave France for longer. Allan was very grateful for her. Although all danger had gone by, he longed to be with his wife; but knowing all he knew of the man who had been his big to stay at Redhill, he was perfectly aware that Josephine's husband had taken up his abode at Reddon Inn, and feared to leave the neighborhood while Mander continued there. It was the third day after Mr. Boucherier had spoken those important words that a clerk from the Westlake Bank, Longmore Branch, called at Redhill, and asked to see Mr. Boucherier, or, failing him, Mr. Allan. He was the bearer of a bill accepted, ostensibly by Mr. Boucherier, and payable in London to the order of Right Honorable. It was due the day before, and as no funds had been deposited to meet it, and as Mr. Digby Boucherier's banking account had nothing to place against it, it had been sent down for presentation to the acceptor. Allan examined it. The signature was palpable. "That is not my father's signature," he said. "It is forged."

It was at this moment staying at the Reddon Inn. He need feel neither hand nor foot—others would see to it all. George Mander would have the pleasure of spending the year or two in fitting company. "It is a forgery," he said, "and forged by the drawer, whose right name is George Mander, and who is at this moment staying at the Reddon Inn." The bank clerk left and telegraphed the news to London. The next morning, waiting at Sleaford Junction for the Brackley train, was a gentleman who had in his pocket a document which would necessitate George Mander bearing him company back to town. It happened that on this particular morning Mr. Mander had grown nervous and giddy. He did not think events would have marched so quickly, but he felt it behooved him to be careful. Mr. Boucherier, he had learned, still lingered in the same hopeless condition—oblivious to promissory notes or acceptances, whether rightly or wrongly drawn. From Allan he had no mercy to expect. In fact, the game was all but up.

He dare not linger at Reddon any longer. To-morrow it might be too late. Fortunately he had two or three hundred pounds left in his pocket-book. He must fly and try to strike out a fresh career. Once safe in a land where there were no extradition treaties, he could look round and try to better himself. He could threaten Allan just as well by letter as by word of mouth. So it was that at the very moment the gentleman from London was waiting at Sleaford Junction for the Brackley train, Mr. Mander was on the same platform waiting for the train to take him to Blacktown; and he saw the gentleman from London. At this particular time Mr. Mander was keeping as sharp a lookout for strangers as his besotted senses would allow. Moreover, he had seen this stranger's face before. For a while he could not remember where. It was a remarkable face, rather an unfortunate one for a member of his profession, but he had never seen it before. It was impressed on a man's memory. As the train whirled it away, Mr. Mander remembered where he had seen it, and remembered to whom it belonged. He felt that thankful he had been so cautious—that he had left Reddon without paying his inn bill and without his portmanteau. He would now be able to baffle pursuit. He might be hidden for days in a large way like Blacktown. But the best plan would be to start for his destination at once. The innkeeper, in the face of his unpaid bill and unremoved luggage, would inform the gentleman from London that his guest would certainly return ere long; and the gentleman from London would wait—wait perhaps until late at night. Oh, yes, he had plenty of time.

Spain must be his destination. He had looked into the matter, in case of painful contingencies, and settled that years ago. Blacktown being a large seaport, he might find a steamer sailing from there the very day for Spain. If not, he must go elsewhere.

Nevertheless, he felt strangely out of sorts and craving for stimulation when he reached Blacktown. It was a craving easily supplied. Having for the time stilled it, he went to work to make inquiries. He felt there was no need to be too particular; if he could not get away at once, the chance was he would be compelled to stay. So he walked boldly down to the quays and inquired at a shipping agent if a steamer left for Spain. He found there was none. His disappointment was very great, and he needed several doses of his indispenable medicine to bring him into working order again. At times he felt very queer, and dashed his hand across his eyes as though he were weeping. He had never heard of a fugitive being looked after there. Liverpool looked after the port where he was caught. To Carport he must go.

Now came the question: Should he lie hidden in Blacktown until the next steamer left for the Peninsula? Could he risk it? He thought not. He was sure to be traced. He had noticed that people looked at him curiously as they answered his inquiries. He must try elsewhere. Then the large Welsh seaport—in many things Blacktown's rival—came to his mind. The idea pleased him. He had never heard of a fugitive being looked after there. Liverpool looked after the port where he was caught. To Carport he must go.

General News and Notes. Bird's Brain of Horsehold cures Coughs and Colds as by magic. The flux has to be broken before its strength can be known. Have You Seen It? The new Egyptian Dream Book is creating quite a stir. Whether you believe in dreams or visions or not it will interest and instruct all who read it, as it contains full interpretations of a complete list of dreams with other attractive features. Sent by return mail on receipt of 5 cent stamp. T. Milburn & Co., Toronto, Ont.

"What's your face for collecting this?" he inquired, with a nervous thrill; the lawyer calmly made reply: "the whole amount of the bill."

GENTLEMEN.—One of my little girls (aged 2 years) had been troubled with constiveness in its worst form since infancy. We tried different remedies which gave relief while they lasted, but none discontinued she would be worse than before using the last her appetite and was growing weak and delicate. A friend of mine who had used B. B. W. with great results for the same disease advised me to try it, and also the Barkoid Pills, which we did. She did not take the contents of one bottle before it relieved her, and not only relieved her but permanently cured her for she has not been troubled once since, and she is now eight years old. HENRY RYNDOLDS, Sarspta, Ont. Character is a perfect educated will.

Nothing Succeeds Like Success. Burdock Blood Bitters is a household remedy for dyspepsia, it expels rheumatism and neuralgia from the system, acts as an antispasmodic on the stomach, liver and bowels, antagonizes blood poison, builds up and revitalizes the bodily function and restores and purifies the entire system. Want of goods is easily repaired, but poverty of soul is irreparable. Cabinet Reconstruction. A popular topic is cabinet reconstruction, which really does not concern the public as much as the reconstruction and cleaning of the human system against the approach of spring. The premier medicine for this purpose is Burdock Blood Bitters, and that parties recognize it as the best blood purifier and general system regulator known. Make no promise that are not clearly right, and break no such promises when others who are delicate. People with delicate stomachs find Ayer's Sarsaparilla agreeable to the taste, and therefore prefer it to a blood-purifier to any other. H. C. McLEAN, N. B.

This is one reason for its great popularity as a spring and family medicine. Safe, certain, and palatable. Head lobe locks at everything through money. It is quite probable that you may need the services of a physician some day; but you can postpone the time indefinitely by keeping your blood pure and your system invigorated through the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Prevention is better than cure. "Consistency is a jewel" is one of a number of expressions, "like express packages without their manifests," to which authorship has never been traced. A Wonderful Death Pre-vention. This is the gift given to Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil by more than a hundred who have taken it. It not only gives flesh and strength by virtue of its own nutritious properties, but creates an appetite for food. Use it and try you will. Scott's Emulsion is perfectly palatable. Sold by all Druggists, at 50c and $1.00.

A FEW DOSES OF THE GRANGER CONDITION POWDER WILL REPAIR THE WEAKNESS OF THE SYSTEM. Miramichi Advance. Beginning with the issue of November 6th, 1890, when the ADVANCE entered upon its Seventeenth Year of Publication! The publisher made an important change in the terms on which the paper is furnished to subscribers. They include: 1st. Strict adherence to the system of cash in advance for all subscriptions. 2nd. The reduction of the price of the paper to One Dollar a Year!

One Dollar and Sixty Cents a Year! I have made special arrangements with the WEEKLY TELEGRAPH OF ST JOHN AND THE FAMILY HERALD AND WEEKLY STAR of Montreal by which I will furnish either of those papers and the "ADVANCE" TOGETHER AT One Dollar and Sixty Cents a Year! I have made the foregoing changes in the business of the ADVANCE for two reasons. The first is because many patrons who have been given credit, have abused the privilege to such an extent as to make the business of publishing the paper non-paying one, and it is necessary, in my own interest and that of those who do pay, that I should no longer continue to furnish the ADVANCE to those non-paying subscribers. The second reason is that I wish to meet the competition of the city weeklies, which are made up from the type of the dailies and, therefore, cost little for production in comparison with a local paper like the ADVANCE, the type of which must be set up especially for it.

Card to the Public. Having published the ADVANCE for sixteen years, and endeavored to make it a creditable representative of Miramichi and North Shore enterprise—a paper which may be taken into any household without fear that it has catered to sensationalism at the sacrifice of that element of matter, which is too often neglected by the press of the day—I have reason to hope the foregoing announcement will meet with general approval and be the means of largely increasing the circulation and influence of the paper.
