Mrs. S. D. Scott's Address on the Working of Associated Charities,
— 1871 —
n Bringing Before the Council the Resolution Sent Up from St. John.

was led to say:

In this connection it might be remarked that it is a pity that some of those who are prone to scoff at woman and her work could not be induced to attend some of the business meetings of the council. Many such would be considerably enlightened. If not so, they would at least be able to give evidence of a thorough mastery of the details of matters under discussion, but their business-like methods would let in a flood of light upon the unlimited.

Mrs. Cummings' paper on the condition of the aged poor, with ~~the discussion~~ ^{the discussion} thereon, brought out a statement that in some of the cities and mutual understanding, and encourage and reward a systematic and deliberate swindler. So we believe that in the mere matter of alms giving alone the association of local charities would pay its way many times over, purely as a labor saving institution and as affording protection from fraud, and a more effective expenditure of the means at our disposal.

But it should be still more effective ⁱⁿ its wisdom to devise and its power to carry out large and comprehensive measures, not for the relief of the used in this argument also said that only women whose married life had been unhappy wished to have the ballot, but she could say that it was just such women who should not vote. Another objection made was that it was a waste of power for both men and women to vote, that the work of women and men was divided, and the work of the world should be divided in the same way. Mrs. Sewall answered this objection by saying that she believed in sex of mind as well as sex of soul and body, and that public

Her excellency was completely surprised, but responded briefly, thanking the council with deepest gratitude for the honor conferred upon her. This action will go into permanent effect next year, when the resolutions passed this morning in reference to offer for imitation. An account of the working of associated charities in our city would resemble chapter 37 (I think it is) of a celebrated book. It has the title "On Snakes in Iceland," and reads "There are no snakes in Iceland." There are no associated charities in St. John.
