Hoosiah Butterworth has an appreciative article on "The South American Poets" in the July Review of Reviews. It is surprising how little is known about the literature of the Spanish-American republics by citizens of the United States. Mr. Butterworth succeeds in showing that these countries have recently produced much verse of striking beauty and power. His article will be appreciated by all our literary men and women who desire to be in touch with the writers of Latin America.

The Fourth of July number of the Youth's Companion has a story by C. A. Stephens which will make many an old boy wish he were young again. Mr. Stephens tells how some country boys, who wanted to make the biggest noise that was ever heard produced a dozen explosions high up in the air in the middle of the "night before the Fourth." The explosions worked so well that wind-does, followers, who had been peeping out into the street, and the boys had to "take to the woods." The way in which a boys' military company saved a village celebration from failure is vividly told in the story by C. A. Stephens, and the experience of five cow-boys who earned $1000 capturing grizzlies on Independence Day make an interesting picture of what the Fourth may be in the far West. The late Admiral Sir Horatio H. B. Howe, of this number of The Companion a most interesting account of the shipboard, and the picture of the great mountain-climber, relates some of his youthful adventures which are exciting enough to make a Fourth of July in themselves.

The Treasury of Religious Thought for July, 1900, opens with an illustrated account of the practical Christian work of the Florence Mission in New York. The late Admiral Sir Horatio H. B. Howe, of this number of The Companion a most interesting account of the shipboard, and the picture of the great mountain-climber, relates some of his youthful adventures which are exciting enough to make a Fourth of July in themselves.
