the Conference ^{is} apt to be put in faulty perspective. It is true there were a number of procedural skirmishes in which the Great Powers, who had sponsored the Conference and who will be responsible for the final draft of the treaties of peace, found themselves opposed to most of the other countries participating in the Conference. But how can anybody with his wits about him and his daily paper before him believe for one moment that the question of the political and constitutional relationships of the Great Powers and the smaller powers is the real problem of international relations of the world today? This relationship has been a problem in the past and may be a problem again in the future. Right now, in this year of grace 1946, surely every man and country concerned about the future peace of the world should do his best to help keep the Great Powers working closely together and should not attempt to pry their uneasy unity. ^{fact} The deep and dangerous divisions are between the Great Powers themselves and not between the Great Powers on one side and smaller powers on the other. As I see it, it is our duty and interest to do what we can, where we can, to diminish these divisions and certainly not to exacerbate them. It is in accordance with these instructions that the Canadian delegation is continuing to play its appropriate part in the Conference proceedings.
