

BELGIUM AND GREECE

in pursuing such a course. They did not; from beginning to end they have demanded nothing except the use of Macedonia for military purposes and honest neutrality on the part of Greece.

What, in fact, we have in the case of Greece is not the ruthless abuse of force on the part of the Allies. It is quite the reverse—a small State presuming on the consideration which she knew that she would receive just because of her own weakness, and, trading on the long-established interest which France and England had shown her, using her position to violate her treaties and to commit acts of scarcely veiled hostility, on which no great Power would ever have ventured.
