Lancaster's Perennial Attack.

A. E. Lancaster's annual onslaught on the railways began today when his three bills to amend the railway act, came up for a second reading. The first proposes to make a clause that the railway commissioner and he alone shall have the right to adjudicate as to the kind of contract to be made between railways and shippers. To illustrate his meaning he specified the case of a man who had shipped a consignment of horses valued at $16,000. The railway refused to accept them unless in the contract the horses were given a value of only $1,200.
