Trained Muscles versus Trained Brains.

BY J. R. HAMILTON.

If I had a son I would keep him in some kind of a school if I had to drag him there with a halter.

All the failure and all the misery in the world are due to nothing more nor less than lack of mental training.
Success is so easy when it is understood that failure is no longer merely unfortunate; it is pitiful.

The training of a brain is as easy to-day as the training of a muscle was yesterday. And no man with a well trained brain ever had to lie to his stomach about the dinner hour.

Education? No. That isn't. Brain training; that's the thing. And there isn't a university, there isn't a high school, there isn't a business college to-day that doesn't understand this fact.

Twenty years ago Collis P. Hunt-ingham said there was too much education in America. Then he was right because the schools were wrong.
To-day he would be wrong because the schools are RIGHT.

Every school now understands that there is something more to success than Greek and Latin, or the laws of engineering or a certain method of taking shorthand notes. They are brain training institutions every one of them and you can not do without them now, no matter how hard you try.

The day of the self-made man is over. His method takes too long. The experience that has cost him years to acquire we can go out and buy in a day.

It is a pitiful thing to see any boy or girl go into the world without this technical training—without this capacity for success. And this training is just as important to-day for girls as it is for boys, because the market supply of untrained women is bringing down the wages of untrained men and each is doing the other infinite harm.

Don't miss your opportunity for success. Don't start out half finished in the world. Don't go into the race with a mental handicap. Strength and courage and enthusiasm and capacity all come with knowledge.

If you had it in your mind to stop school now, just close your eyes for a moment, and look down the vista of the years. Think how terrible it must be to feel in each crisis of life that your mind has never been trained—that you aren't fit. And think how glorious it must be to feel that you have been thoroughly trained and are ready for any emergency that can arise.

University or military academy technical school or business college—it makes no difference what direction you take—that is up to your own inclination. It's the training that counts—the training that spells success.

And now that you've made up your mind to go on, just look over these schools. Pick out the ones that interest you most and write them a letter to-day.

One of the things they all will teach you is TO COME TO A DECIS-ION—AND ACT.

Horse Delays Train.

The express train was stopped for nearly two hours at Jumper's Brook yesterday owing to a horse being on the track. The animal was frightened and in endeavouring to get off was caught in the ties. The express was brought to a standstill and the train hands extricated the beast. Had the mishap occurred at night the horse would have been killed and a train accident would probably be the result.

Shoal in Harbor.

During a recent survey by the S.
S. Ellinor a new shoal has been discovered in the harbour. It is situated on the east side between the Block House and Chain Rock. At the spot referred to the water is only twenty-four feet deep and is not marked off on the charts. The officers of the survey ship continue surveying the shoal to get proper bearings of it.

Beauty Hints.

Al, beauty is a rare possession!
It makes this life
here fit to live.
And there are beauties of expression which beat all charms that drugs will give. Jeannina has a fine complexion, and pearly teeth and azure eyes, and golden ringlets, in connection with rits and things that I despise. When first you see this glowing maiden with all her wealth of dazzling charms, you think she's come direct from Aiden, and long to take her in your arms. But when you know the damsel better she doesn't satisfy the soul; alas, she is a chronic fretter—her temper isn't in control.
She sulks and deals in pettish phrases, and all such things will leave their trace; in time they will distort like blazes that lovely and angelic face. Methinks I see her when she's older, with shrewish mouth and crimson beak, and he will be a sutor bolter than lions who her hand will seek. Mirandy has a disposition as sweet as honey from the comb; it's always been her sane ambition to make things pleasant in her home. She doesn't spend her time a-naggin', kind words are all she ever said; she's prettier than any wagon that ever yet was painted red, and as the years are swiftly sliding, still prettier this girl will grow; till on his pale white steed comes riding the knight with whom we all must go.
