Cut Your Fuel Bills 1/3

You should know how important it is to weather strip your house and buildings. Weatherstrips keep out cold and actually save one third of your fuel expense. Fuel is as high as ever and there is very little chance that its cost will come down soon. It is too expensive to waste.

Not only can you keep out cold by installing Ceco Metal Weatherstrips, but your house is kept free from dust, dirt and soot, and the disturbance of street noises.

Ceco Metal Weatherstrips are economically installed, they last as long as the building. They are cheaper than storm and sash seals and are far more effective.

No matter what your house is in the process of construction or old as the hills, let us show you without obligation the convenience and effectiveness of this most practical weather strip on the market.

WHAT SEALS OUR LIPS.

To whom do you find it easier to say gracious things, words of praise and admiration to those of your household or to friends and acquaintances?

I think there are many people who seem to find their lips sealed as if the dragonfly of our childhood's fears had been about, when they try to say to their nearest and dearest the words of praise that they so easily say to a casual stranger. I came upon a striking example of this recently.

The mother of a girlhood friend mine has always been something of a tyro in our crowd for her admiration of her clever and charming daughter.

Try to Escape.

We all know that Rachel can turn her hand to anything, that she keeps her youth wonderfully, that she has a model husband who thinks everything she does is perfect, and that her two children are marvels of deportment and charm. Sometimes when we see Mrs. Damon coming we feel as if we do not want to hear the changes sung on all those facts again and we are tempted to slip by on the other side of the street.

Not long ago I met Rachel herself and for the first time in years we had enough of a visit together to become confidential. I spoke of her mother and this is what she said:

Breaking Burglars' Hearts.

Have you ever been inside the strong room of a bank?

Those of the newest type are both fireproof and burglar-proof. The walls, floor, and ceiling consist of great masses of concrete in which are embedded steel rods. Should a burglar undertake the task of boring through one of these walls, the hard steel breaks his heart by breaking his drills one after another.

Not a scrap of wood is used, every fitting—even the door and window frames—being of thin steel. There is nothing in the room that can catch fire.

Besides the huge locks that open with a key, the doors of the safes have an automatic fastening regula-about her. "I'd like to have mother live with me but it's almost impossible because she criticises and finds fault with me so. She never has a good word for me or the children, or the house, or anything I say or do."

Couldn't Believe It.

You can imagine how that astonished me. I could hardly believe she meant it at first. Fancy Mrs. Damon, who sometimes bored us by the monotony of her praises, having nothing but fault-finding and criticisms to say to the object of those praises!

But Rachel stuck to it. And when I told her how very differently her mother spoke of her to others it was equally hard for her to believe my story.

It was simply a case of one of those strange inhibitions which keep us from saying the gracious things we think to those whom we love.

Another time I heard a woman complain that her sister was always praising other people's children but never had a good word to say to her about her own nephews and nieces.

Yet She Adores.

Yet I happen to know that that woman adores her nephews and nieces, thinks there are no children equal to them, is constantly telling other people how bright and cunning they are. And yet she finds it hard to say those things to the one who would like most to hear them.

These are exaggerated cases but I think many of us suffer from these inhibitions to some extent. Why is it, I wonder?

ted by a clock. When he closes the room for the night the manager shoots a second set of bolts. Then he sets the controlling clock to open them at a certain hour the next day. Once the door has been unlocked its great mass, weighing four or five tons, can be pushed open with a finger, so delicately is it balanced upon its hinges.

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir,—With "Citizen's" prodigality of historical knowledge, he surely admits his ignorance as to the manner in which King John was forced to sign the Great Charter of English Liberties. Does he not know that the barons assembled at Runnymede "under arms," and by their formidable appearance forced King John to give reluctant assent to their demands. Arms do not always suggest bloodshed excepting to sanguinary minds, and "Citizen" must be the unenviable possessor of one of these. The magnanimity of his forgiveness is overpowering.

Yours truly,
SCHOOLBOY.

June 20, 1922.

Quite Right.

The prizes had been given out, and the children stood in bored silence as the headmistress introduced a famous speaker who was noted for his patriotic fervour.

Towards the end of his discourse he waxed eloquent. "And now, children," he cried, "if you saw your glorious flag waving triumphantly over the battlefield, what would you think?"

There was a prolonged pause, and the speaker smiled gently. "Come," he said, encouragingly, "won't someone answer?"

A voice from the back broke the silence. "Please, guv'nor, I'd think the wind was blowing."

An Aid to Pathos.

The manager of a certain travelling company played the leading part in the majority of the plays he put on.

In one town it happened that the company met with very little success, the theatre being almost empty every night. In consequence the box-office returns were practically nil.

On Thursday night the takings were the worst of all, the audience comprising only about forty or fifty people, most of whom were in the cheapest seats.

When the performance was half over, the man who looked after the tickets approached the manager as the latter was about to go on the stage.

"What time shall I bring you the box-office receipts, sir?" he asked. The manager stared at him blankly for a moment.

"Oh," he retorted, "just before I go on in my pathetic scene."
