THE LEADING DRESS GOODS HOUSE OF LONDON. R. J. Young & Co. THE LEADING DRESS GOODS HOUSE OF LONDON.MURDERER MOIR ESCAPED

The Murder.
On the night of Good Friday, April 17, 1908, Private Moir, partly intoxicated, went to Wolsley Barracks. He was accompanied by several other soldiers, and on an Oxford street car appeared to be in very bad humor.

It appears that he had been having trouble at the barracks, and had been reprimanded on several occasions by his superiors.

The night in question, his appearance was very slowly, and it was stated that one of the officers who happened to be at the barracks entry, again reprimanded him. His clothes were only partially buttoned, and he irritated his superiors.

Moir went to his room and brooded over the incident.

His room mate saw him fill his cartridge belt, place two revolvers in his pockets and then seize his military rifle.

His fellow soldier asked him what he was about to do, and Moir replied that he was going to get even with somebody.

Shot the Officer.
A short time afterward a shot was heard, and the whole barracks was aroused.

Captain Snyder ordered Color-Sergeant Lloyd, of Stratford, who was taking a course at the barracks, to investigate. Lloyd found Moir, rifle in hand, standing in the corner of the room, while his mate was lying half-asleep in his cot.

"Keep back," shouted Moir. "I'll shoot the first man who lays a hand on me."

The captain ordered Sergeant Lloyd to disarm the half-crazed soldier, and Lloyd, obeying the command, advanced.

As he did so, Moir took deliberate aim and fired.

The bullet pierced the sergeant's breast, and he fell, dying a minute later.

The others hastily beat a retreat, and an armed force was called to arrest the murderer.

Lost in the Dark.
In the dark Moir slipped out, ran across the parade grounds and, scaling the fence, got out onto Oxford street.

He was soon lost track of, and the city police were notified.

Then a chase of hundreds of miles followed.

It was not for several weeks that the murderer was located working on a farm near Arthur, Ontario, north of Guelph.

The farmer for whom he worked became suspicious when Moir cut out portions of the daily papers which came to the house, and which, on investigation, were found to be stories concerning himself and the murder.

Finally Moir was arrested by Constable Flaherty and others after a desperate fight in the farmer's barn. He was heavily armed, but was taken by surprise, and had no chance to use his revolver.

Sent to Asylum.
The prisoner was brought back to London and tried. Evidence from Scotland Yard went to show that he was an epileptic, and had suffered from fits since boyhood. The result was that he was found guilty of murder and was sent to the asylum for the criminally insane at Hamilton. Since his incarceration there he has been a thorn in the side of Dr. English, a former Londoner, who is superintendent of the institution. He has made several desperate attempts to escape, and at last has been successful.

Not Surprised.
Officials at the county jail who know Private Moir, the London soldier, who escaped from Hamilton Asylum for Criminally Insane, are not surprised at his latest and successful attempt to gain his liberty.

Moir was always at least fairly obliging, and made no trouble while he was awaiting trial on a charge of murdering Col. Serjt. Lloyd at Wolsley Barracks, but as soon as his trial was completed and he received his sentence his manner greatly changed.

He was very disagreeable, and although he never was discovered attempting to break jail a close watch was kept on him at all times, as it was evident that he did not intend to linger around the county jail if he could help himself.

"Moir was all right until sentenced," said Gov. Arthur this morning, "but he was certainly very contrary after being consigned to the Hamilton Asylum for the remainder of his life."

WELLINGTON STREET MAN STRUCK BY LOCOMOTIVEJohn T. Hooper Sat Down Near Tracks and Failed to Notice Approach of Train.

John T. Hooper, of 78 Wellington street, had his left arm fractured at the elbow last night as the C. N. bridge by being struck by the cylinder of a freight engine that was coming to the city.

Hooper had been for a walk out the C. N. tracks, and after crossing the bridge at about 11 p.m. he sat down on the tracks and rested after his walk. He apparently dozed a little and failed to notice the approaching freight, and the cylinder struck him in the side and knocked him partially down the embankment.

Hooper was able to pick himself up and went to a nearby house, and later was taken to Victoria Hospital in the ambulance. He will be around again in the course of a couple of weeks.

CHARGED WITH STEALING SOME MONTHS AGOMr. Egbert Johnson Taken Into Custody by the Police.

The case was enlarged for a week.

Isaac Baum, a Jewish peddler, was charged with driving a horse with a shoulder.

ENGLISHWOMEN'S FEET.
The short skirts now in vogue in London are making one fact quite evident: That Englishwomen's feet are larger than they were the last time short skirts were in fashion. A reporter watched a number of his countrywomen at smart tea shops and in fashionable thoroughfares and was convinced that this was the case, so he went to various shoe stores for confirmation.

He found that there he learned the truth, that Englishwomen are taking far larger sizes in shoes than in former days. Substantial fives and sixes are required in place of the twos and threes which used to be worn. Indeed, one shoe dealer informed the reporter that in the last ten years the lowest size in women's shoes had risen from a two and a half to a five—that is, from a nine and a half-inch shoe to a ten-inch shoe. In proportion as sizes have increased, heels have grown higher till now it is not an uncommon sight to see a tall Englishwoman adding to her stature by three and one-half inch heels, on which she totters along. The feet of American women are not getting larger, say English shoe dealers. In fact, it is for American sales that the small sizes are kept at some of the larger shops.—From the New York Sun.

HOW TO BE POPULAR.
Everyone would like to have a graceful manner, to be popular, to be loved by everybody, says Orison's Sweet Marden in Success Magazine. It is a legitimate ambition to be well thought of and admired by our fellow-men. Yet the majority of us are not willing to make any great sacrifice to acquire this art of arts—in fact, we are all the time doing things which repel others and which inevitably tend to make us unpopular.

We have to take infinite pains to succeed in our vocations or any accomplishment worth while, and should we expect to gain the air of arts, the charm of personality, the power to please, to attract, to interest, without making great efforts?

Selfishness in all its forms is always and everywhere despised. No one likes a person who is bound up in himself, who is constantly thinking how he can advance his own interests and promote his own comfort.

The secret of popularity is to make everybody you meet feel that you are especially interested in him. If you really feel kindly toward others, if

SANDOW FIGHTS WITH BIG LIONFamous Strong Man Tells of His Bout with the King of Beasts.

This story, which quite rivals the exploits of Samson, or of Richard Coeur de Lion, is told by the strong man, Sandow, in the Strand Magazine.

It was to be a struggle between brute strength and human strength. Merely in order to prevent the lion from tearing me to pieces with its claws, mittens were to be placed on his feet and a muzzle over his head.

This lion, I must tell you, was a particularly fierce animal, and only a week before he enjoyed a dish that was not on the menu—his keeper.

Well, the engagement was accordingly made and "A Lion Fight With Sandow" widely advertised. The announcement, I am told, sent a thrill through the cities for a hundred miles around, and in order to be equipped for a performance which would be bound to attract hundreds of thousands of people, I decide to rehearse my fight with the lion beforehand.

I had it in my mind that the effect of muzzling any muzzling the beast might be to put him off the fight by frightening him, and realizing how foolish I should appear facing a lion that would not fight, I was desirous of making certain that this should not be the case.

Accordingly the lion was muzzled and muzzled, but only with the aid of six strong men, and I entered the cage unarmed and stripped to the waist. What happened was in direct opposition to my expectations. Instead of his paws and encasing his head in a wire cage only served to enrage the brute, and no sooner had I stepped inside than he crouched, preparing to spring on me.

His eyes glared with fury, he hurled himself through the air, but missed, for I had stepped aside, and before he had time to recover, I caught him with my left arm around the throat, and round the middle with my right arm, although his weight was 350 pounds, I lifted him as high as my shoulder, I gave him a huge hug, to instill into his mind that he must respect me, and tossed him to the floor.

Boasting with rage, the beast rushed fiercely toward me, and raised his huge paw to strike a heavy blow at my head. As his paw cut through space I felt the air whistle and realized not only my lucky escape, but the lion's weak point, and at the same time I knew it would be my coup de grace; and I took particular care that he never should strike.

As I ducked my head to avoid the blow, I succeeded in getting a good grip round the lion's body, with my chest touching his, and with my feet over my shoulders, and hugged him with all my might.

He tried to me, he scratched and tore, the harder I hugged him, and although his feet were protected by mittens, his claws tore through my tights and part of my skin. But I had him as in a vise; his mighty efforts to get away proved of no avail.

By not leaving the cage, however, I was determined to try just one other feat. Moving away from the lion, I stood with my back toward him, thus openly inviting him to jump on me.

At once he sprang right on to my back.

Throwing up my arms, I gripped his head, then caught him firmly by the neck, and in one motion shot him clean over my head, assisted by the animal's own momentum, and launched him before me like a sack of sawdust, the action causing him to turn a complete somersault.

While he lay there, dazed, the door was unlocked, and I went out, my legs and neck bleeding, and with scratches all over my body. But for these trifles I cared nothing. I felt that I had conquered that lion, and that I should have little difficulty in mastering it on the next occasion in public.

So thoroughly we he tamed, however, that the great fight lasted but two minutes. When he would fight no more, I lifted him up and walked round the arena with him on my shoulders, he remaining firm as a rock and as quiet as an old sheep.

LIGHTNING LEAST OF DANGERS.
Why are so many people, brave under all other conditions, so deathly afraid of thunder and lightning?

It is not because lightning is so dangerous, for it isn't half as dangerous as going out of the house on an icy morning, walking down the cellar stairs or a hundred other things we do every day without a thought of personal harm. More people are killed each year by falling building material, more die by fright than are killed by lightning. The census bureau shows only 169 people killed by lightning in this entire country during the year 1898, and only 30 of these people were killed in the cities. Heat and the sun killed 763 during the same year. 293 died from cold and freezing, and 4,395 were drowned.

But you will find it quite a waste of time during a thunderstorm to try to ease the fears of a person who is afraid by telling him or her that the chances of being killed by lightning are less than two in a million; they will remain just as frightened for all this mortuary knowledge. And after the storm has passed and nerves are steadied, the woman who was so frightened a few minutes before will start getting supper on the gas.

MANX LAWS.

Manx laws, as Mr. Hall Caine has pointed out in the Chronicle, are far more favorable to women than our own. Every woman, widow or spinster, in the Isle of Man, whether she be owner, occupier or even lodger, enjoys the franchise for the house of keys election. A law respecting women, which is probably unique, was repealed early in the last century, after being in force 240 years. "If a man take a woman against her will, if she be a wife, he must suffer death; if she be a maid, the deemer shall give her a rope, a sword and a ring; and she shall have her choice—either to hang him with the rope, cut off his head with the sword or marry him with the ring." Popular tradition relates that one woman, who insisted on hanging her aggressor, repented after he had been suspended some time, cut him down and offered him the ring. He took it, but, remarking that one punishment was enough, refused to marry her.—London Chronicle.
