AMUSEMENTS, LECTURES AMUSEMENTS, LECTURES THEATRE

Attractive Features for Week of April 5 MONDAY AND TUESDAY.

"OLD PEG-LEG'S WILL" A two-part mining drama, produced by the "101 Bison" players, in which Francis Ford and Grace Cunard enact the leading roles. Old "Peg Leg" was a real character and came to California in 1847, just before the big gold boom. The story of the play was suggested to Grace Cunard by an old miner, who actually knew the original and who conducted the "101 Bison" players to Barstow, where the story was filmed, not far away from the spot where Peg Leg's mine was located.

"HOUNDED"

A two-part Rex melodrama, in which Ben Wilson and Anna Luther play leading roles. Many a convict, if given a chance upon his release from prison, would be only too willing to "go straight." Often when the gates of Sing Sing or the state prison open upon the time-expired convict, he finds that he is still or the state prison open upon the time-expired convict, he finds that he is still a hunted man. The police keep well-informed of his new address; he is shadowed a hunted man. The police keep well-informed of his new address; he is shadowed by detectives, and if public clamor demands the arrest of some one for crime, by detectives, and if public clamor of demands the arrest of some one for crime, by detectives, and if public clamor of acquittal before a prejudiced jury, against him, the convict has little chance of acquittal before a prejudiced jury, and a few weeks after his arrest the prison gates yawn again before him. Even and a few weeks after him to act as a stool pigeon, the convict is constantly open to temptations from his old pals. He may move to another city and attempt to "go straight," but in prison he has made hundreds of acquaintances who, upon to "go straight," but in prison he has made hundreds of acquaintances who, upon their release, scatter to the ends of the earth, and he is soon found out. Rather than risk exposure at the hands of these old companions, the ex-convict submits to blackmail or goes back into the old life, eventually to find himself in the police to blackmail or goes back into the old life, eventually to find himself in the police to blackmail or goes back into the old life, eventually to find himself in the police to blackmail or goes back into the old life, eventually to find himself in the police to blackmail or goes back into the old life, eventually to find himself in the police to blackmail or goes back into the old life, eventually to find himself in the police to blackmail or goes back into the old life, eventually to find himself in the police to blackmail or goes back

WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY. "THE MASTER KEY" No. 14. Is now rapidly drawing to a close. "HER BARGAIN"

A two-reel society drama, produced by Big U players. Rejected by a fickle millionaire, wealthy girl picks husband from laboring class and later learns to love him. Money cannot buy happiness, according to an old adage, but in these modern days there are few who believe it. Still, there are some of us who realize that, even with money, one cannot purchase real affection, genuine esteem or the kind regard of one's fellowmen. There are tragedies in the social world which parallel those of more modest walks of life. Some of them go unchronicled and unheralded in the press.

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY. "WOLVES OF SOCIETY"

Two-reel society drama. Ruth Mayhew, an heiress, lives with her uncle, Henry Mayhew, who is also her guardian. She has a sweetheart in Richard Dare, a rising young engineer. Paula, an adventuress, and her accomplice, Gilbert Carstairs, work themselves into the confidence of Mayhew, posing as brother and sister. Richard Dare, after a tender parting with his sweetheat, leaves for Mexico to take up the construction of a new railroad line there. Paula lays siege to the heart of Henry Mayhew, and finally marries him. She and her accomplice then proceed to do the old man out of his fortune. The new turn of affairs proves irksome to Ruth Mayhew, and she leaves her uncle's house to make her own living, but is unsuccessful. Richard Dare returns from Mexico and, going to the Mayhew home, learns of Ruth's continued absence. He is very much worried. Outside the house he meets an outcast, who informs him that inside the Mayhew home is the woman who has been the cause of his ruin. Ricard Dare cares for the outcast, who is on the verge of collapse. The outcast tells Dare how at one time he was a trusted employee in a bank; how he later was led to commit a crime by his false sweetheart, the same woman who is now plotting the ruin of the work with her time he was a trusted employee in a bank; how he later was led to commit a trime he was a trusted employee in a bank; how he later was led to commit a crime by his false sweetheart, the same woman who is now plotting the ruin of Henry Mayhew. He declares that at that time, as now, she works with her accomplice, Gilbert Carstairs, Richard Dare informs the police of the manoeuvres of the guilty pair. By chance, he meets Ruth Mayhew, and together they go to the Mayhew home. Upon the arrival of the police, Carstairs draws a gun on the head of the detective as the latter is about to slip the "bracelets" on him. Old man Mayhew is cruelly undeceived when his wife, Paula, the adventuress, dangles the wonderful jewels she has inveigled from him before his eyes, and then attempts to make her escape. None of the participants in the striking tableau, however, have counted on another actor in the drama, the outcast, who has seen the turn affairs have taken. The outcast leaps upon Carstairs and pinions his arms while the handcuffs are slipped on his wrists. It is the work of only a arms while the handcuffs are slipped on his wrists. It is the work of only a moment to recapture Paula. Little Ruth, in her shabby clothes, comes back to live with her uncle, who recovers most of the money which has been filched from him by the adventuress. Carstairs and Paula are given stiff sentences. Ruth and Richard continue their courtship and as the film ends, indications are not lacking that a marriage will be solemnized in the near future, with Ruth and the young civil engineer as principals at the wedding
