Wives Who Are Only

Don't Drive Your Husband Away With a Broomstick - Make Your House a Liveable Home Instead of a Temple of Housewifely Cleanliness.

Clever Mary—who, take it from me, knows her way about—was talking bout her friend, Martha, the other day.

"Of course, Martha is the Per-fect Housewife," she said, "but she is a mighty poor wife. Without doubt, she is a great and glorious housekeeper and a cook and baker and cleaner. Her bedspreads are like the driven snow. And you could eat off her floors. Her house is so immaculate that her husband must feel a perfect stranger in it, like a bull in a china shop.

"But her days are so taken up with work that she has time for minute to read or to play, or to be a comshe is so worn out by the time night comes that she is too tired to do anything but go to bed. "Her husband loves to read, but if he sits up late, the light annoys her so much that she can't sleep, so she says. So she nags him until he gives t up in disgust. She herself never reads anything except the advertise ments of the department stores in the papers, and the thrilling accounts of vacuum cleaners and patent breakfast foods in the back of the magazines. And when her husband tries to talk to her about the things he is interested

-books, sports, his business-he had just as well try to ring any other "Now, I do all my own housework, and I must be a fairly capable housewife, for my mother-in-law has put her O.K. on me, and that settles that. But there isn't a spot in my house where we can't park ourselves at any time. My library table is filled with books and magazines, and if husband drops ashes and scatters the Sunday papers all over the place, I let him, and gently and painlessly remove them after he has passed "I don't really know anything about sports. I wouldn't recognize a home run if I met it on the street, but when hubby wants to talk about baseball I assume an intelligent expression. I don't ask him if Dempsey is the name of a new pancake flour, and I act as if I were thrilled to death when my John announces Zev won the race, and that Charlie Paddock has set a new track record.

"And I am never too tired to play with my husband. I grab my hat the minute he suggests the movies. I can get ready to go anywhere in an hour. I just adjust my complexion—Martha con-siders that a real vice—and we are off.

"Martha can't understand why my husband very rarely goes away from home of an evening and almost never without me—while hers beats it to the corner drug store as soon as he has eaten his super-excellent dinner. And I just, can't make her see that it is because she puts her house before him. She worships cleanliness and order, and sacrific everything to them.

"The first thing Martha knows, she is going to lose her husband, and she will go around wailing and weeping and telling how hard she worked and what a good housekeeper she was. She never will know that she literally drove him away from her with a broom

"I told Martha the other day that if she would spend less time polishing of her mahogany and more time polishing her finger nails and rubbing up at her mind, it would be better for her. But she just smiled that superior smile that a model housekeeper always bestows on the woman whom she suspects of having dust on the back pantry shelf, and made a dive for a basement sale of somebody's patent cleaning fluid."

> Mary is right. Cleanliness and order are two of the domestic virtues that may easily be converted into vices.

We all know spick and span houses that are no more homes than a shiny tin box would be. Nobody would dare disarrange a sofa cushion in one of them. Nobody would have the courage to move a chair from its appointed place. To track a bit of mud on one of the shining floors would be a high crime and misdemeanor. To leave anything hanging around vould be a sacrilege unspeakable.

Husband and children flee these temples of order and cleanli ness as they would a torture chamber. And they live in dread and fear of the woman who has worked herself cross and irritable attaining her ideal of housewifery.

Most of the real homes are places not too bright and good for human nature's daily use. They are places where you can take your ease; places run on a flexible schedule and only reasonably

Doubtless, the old lady who laid down the maxim. "Feed the brute." as rule for retaining husband's affections said a wise mouthful to women. But more is to be added, for man does not live by bread alone, and it is just as important to feed his soul as his stomach

Every woman who fails to give her husband good, nourishing food fails as a wife, but she fails even more if she does not give him companionship. For, after all, there is a good restaurant on every corner where a man can satisfy his physical hunger, but none but his wife can minister to his spiritual hunger. Fool the woman who doesn't realize this and who spends her time keeping her house clean instead of making it a home.

But that is the trouble with matrimony. A woman can't be either Martha or a Mary. To be a good wife she has got to be both. Copyright, 1924, by Public Ledger Company.

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.
Somehow Danny and Nanny Meadow Mouse had lost interest in the old weed-grown cotton field since seeing the owner of the private little paths they had found there. As soon as they were sure that the stranger was far enough away from them to move without danger of being heard, they scampered for their new home.

"Did you get a good look at that tail?" Nanny, asked when they had reached home.

"Yes," replied Danny, "I did."

"Well, what did you think of it?" asked Nanny. had found there. As soon as they were

"I think," replied Danny, "that it is the tail of a Rat. No member of the Meadow Mouse family ever had a tail like that. Somehow I didn't like that. fellow's looks the second time we saw him. He didn't look quite so mean as Robber the Brown Rat up at Farmer Brown's barn; but just the same, I don't believe I care to have much to do with him."

"That's the most sensible thing I've heard you say for a long time," said Nanny.
"Just the same, I mean to find out who he is and something about him," retorted Danny.
He found out rather sooner than he expected to. A sharp voice right at the doorway of their home under the old stump demanded to know who was in there.

"Two people minding their own busi-bess, and that is no business of yours," squeaked Danny most impolitely, for he hadn't liked the tone in which the question had been asked.
"Oh, yes, it is business of mine,"

"I don't like strangers. Just remember that and keep away from that old cotton field. I have half a mind to come in there and teach you a lesson as it is."

"Come right along," invited Danny, trying to appear bold.

"But Little Robber had no intention of doing anything of the kind. He knew that it would be two one. Besides, that entrance would be a tight

THE TURNING OF THE LEAVES. What takes place when the leaves turn color in the autumn and gives the foliage such brilliant coloring is described as follows: The green matter in the tissue of a leaf is composed of two colors, red and blue. When the sap ceases to flow in the autumn the natural growth of the tree is retarded and oxidation of the tissues takes place. Under certain conditions the green of the leaf changes to red; under duces more brilliant foliage than one There are several things about leaves, however, that even science Mrs. Omond, returned missionary from India, will address the Leper Mission at one or two trees growing side by side of the same age, and having the same red in the fall and the other should turn yellow, or why one branch of a tree should be highly colored and the rest of the tree have only a yellow tint, are questions that are sible to answer as why one member of a family should be perfectly healthy and another sickly.
