Taking Care of the Honey Crop

(Experimental Farms Note.)

Honey is a perishable article no matter whether it is left in the comb or extracted. With care it can be kept in good condition for long periods, especially in the extracted form. Nectar, as stored by the bees, contains a high percentage of water, which must be evaporated before the cells can be filled and the right amount of evaporation has taken place, the honey is sealed over and is then considered to be "ripe." It is not advisable to extract honey until at least three-fourths of the cells are capped, especially in regions where the honey is inclined to be rather thin. Comb honey should be left on the hives until all cells containing honey are sealed but should not be left on any longer than this or the sections are likely to become travel stained.

The honey should be extracted as soon as possible after the supers are removed from the hives and if done while still warm, more honey will be taken from the combs. After the honey is extracted it must be strained to remove all foreign matter. Straining may be done through fine cheesecloth or by letting the honey stand in tanks for two or three days, when all foreign matter will have risen to the surface. If the honey is well ripened, it should be placed in the final containers at once before it starts to granulate, but if it is too thin it should be left in the tanks a short time for further ripening. Honey should be stored in a dry place, as it readily absorbs moisture from a damp atmosphere. Honey ripening in tanks should stand in a warm, dry room. Ripened honey in containers ready for market will keep better in a cold, dry place. Section honey should be stored in a well-ventilated room where the temperature is high and constant or moisture will condense on the cappings and be absorbed.

Phonograph Records for Posterity

Phonograph records as a means of perpetuating the story of present day civilization have suggested themselves to persons who have worried over how those to come after will know how we lived.

Looking far ahead of his time, a German professor is collecting phonograph records, which he is said to guarantee for 10,000 years to appear the intelligent curiosity of posterity about the present age. Imagination conjures up a picture of Mr. and Mrs. Posterity selecting a record from their collection of "numerous speeches and sayings gathered from the natives of many countries," and listening with delight while the selected native mechanically addresses the family. Times will have changed, even beyond the reminiscent memory of Grandfather and Grandmother Posterity, and one is justified in wondering upon what kind of chairs, to consider a single detail, they will be sitting and with what kind of toy Baby Posterity will beguile the tedious hour while the curious elders are thus being 'enlightened.'

Of course they will observe the fact that human utterance has materially changed, and the Posterity family may marvel at the oddities and quaintness of the selected native's pronunciation. The younger Posterity's perchance man even giggle, for, unless human nature shall have greatly changed, they will consider their own pronunciation much better than anyone else's. But whether they will be edified by what they will be listening to is altogether different matter. Indeed while such records might fascinate students and present problems for their erudite consideration, it is extremely doubtful if they would be of the slightest real interest or use to our friends, the Posterities.

And then, too, supposing the German professor's records should eventually be discovered by excavation in an age that, having long forgotten the phonograph, would wonder what they were and try to decipher them as presenting an unknown writing. Then, instead of enriching posterity with immediately recognizable knowledge, he would have provided a puzzle for archaeologists comparable to those records of the ancient Minoan civilization which are undoubtedly records, but which nobody can read. Or, again, they might be regarded as symbols of some forgotten religion, the Cult of the Disk, perhaps a form of sun worship.

One would not, however, wish necessarily to discourage the professor. His motive, doubtless, is worthy and disinterested, and if his records (and a phonograph) survive they will surely give posterity food for thought, and material on which to exercise its intellectual ingenuity. Students of literature may even argue that similar things were what suggested the phrase, 'Sonorous metal blowing material sounds,' to the poet Milton when he was writing 'Paradise Lost.'

Cholera Infantum

Cholera infantum is one of the fatal ailments of childhood. It is a trouble that comes on suddenly, especially during the summer months and unless prompt action is taken the little one may soon be beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets are an ideal medicine in warding off this trouble. They regulate the bowels and sweeten the stomach and thus prevent all the dreaded summer complaints. Concerning them Mrs. Fred Rose, South Bay, Ont., says: "I feel Baby's Own Tablets saved the life of our baby when she had cholera infantum and I would not be without them." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers, or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville Ont.
