

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE PRESS.

After a thorough and careful examination of the work, we are convinced that those who are seeking the advancement and welfare of the rising generation will feel grateful to the Rev. Gentleman for this literary production, and we cheerfully recommend it to those who desire to acquaint themselves with the fundamental principles of Rhetoric, so essential to good composition.—Belleville Intelligencer.

We had observed several favorable notices of the Rev. Mr. Hutchinson's Rhetoric in several of our exchanges, and the fact that it comes highly recommended by gentlemen of ability and experience, residing in this place and elsewhere, affords a guarantee as to its merits.—Hastings Chronicle.

We can safely recommend it to the public, as a practical compendium, well adapted to its intended purposes.—Toronto Patriot.

It seems admirably adapted to popular use by the simplicity of its arrangement, and we trust it will be generally adopted as a class book.—Kingston News.

We earnestly recommend it to those who desire to write with taste, elegance and propriety.—Port Hope Watchman,

RHETORIC.—By the Rev. D. Falloon Hutchinson. This is a short and very creditable treatise on Rhetoric. It is very logical in its arrangement and pertinent in its details. We think it well calculated to introduce young persons to the theory of public speaking, in an easy and pleasing manner, as well as to discipline their minds to a clear, unembarrassed and lucid arrangement of subject. We recommend this unpretending treatise to the notice of Members of Parliament, Clergymen, Lecturers, and all who have occasion to speak in public.—Toronto Colonist.

It is a complete exhibition of the graces and style of English composition and public oratory.—Simcoe Standard.
