

BY THE SAME AUTHOR

The Way of the Sea

WITH A FOREWORD BY FRANK T. BULLEN

Illustrated. Second Edition. 6s.

The Daily Telegraph says: "Mr. Norman Duncan touches the high-water mark of modern sea literature; nothing better of its kind has ever been done in English, pitifully little that is anything like so good. The author stands head and shoulders above all predecessors and competitors. Hardly Kipling at his best surpasses Mr. Duncan in his mastery of glowing Saxon diction, in his command of the picturesque element of our tongue, in his eye for literary effect, in his powers of vivid description. Each piece of the book is a gem, a picture, realistic and alluring, of 'the snarling sea,' untamed and untameable, cruel, treacherous, and unappeasable in its might. . . . It is not often that we get work of this kind, and when we do we are bound to make much of it. We have to thank Mr. Duncan for a most delightful book, an addition of permanent and abiding value to our all-too-scanty stock of good sea literature."

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON,

27, PATERNOSTER ROW.