The iron horse is well up the Don Valley. The rails have reached the bridge over the river between the farms of Harvey Armstrong and Sam. Martin, about 5 1-4 miles north of the present terminal of the road in Rosedale. This bridge will be crossed, and it is hoped that the two other crossings north of this one will be made within five days, and the rails up under the C.P.R. viaduct over the Don in less than a week. This will leave a little over three miles to the last crossing of the Don at Clark's, where the rails are already laid from the north. Three weeks ought to see the road ironed from Toronto to Beaverton. This does not mean that all the permanent bridge structures are in place or that the bellesting has been done—this will take some time longer, but a few days more of dry weather will aid the work materially.

Drying Up Fast. The wind and sun of yesterday dried up the roads all over the country, and the land as well, and under favorable circumstances the farmers will be at work by Tuesday or earlier. But a Don Valley weathermaker said last night that there's to be another storm before the farmer gets to work.
