At any rate, Canadians can object to their country being very much to the fore in Massachusetts. The fact that this is so may have very international results. For nportant international results. For the sentiment of New England does, in the long run, powerfully affect that of the whole republic. This promises the enhancement of an already distinct in-clination of the American people to respond to the many evidences of British kindness for the United States. One who knows both countries pretty well can see notable American progress to-wards that grandest of all our race-dreams, viz., that brotherhood in the English language, in English law and in democratic, social and polifical ideals, will yet produce a vast league of peace and industry, which shall proindly influence or mould the future of all humankind. The king, by friendly and politic attitude to Irish people and the Catholic has been a prime factor in advancing the ideal. For the Irish are, by virtue of their wonderful energy, adaptab and political talent, deservedly powerful in the republic. French-Canadians, for somewhat similar reasons, are growing more and more influential in New England. With these two factors making for international amity, prodi-giously good results may well be near, including those concessions to Old Ire-land which would make her a tower of strength to the common cause. New ideas in the Air.

United States Now Advocated.

BOSTON, Mass., June 2,—(Special.)—
Canadians, without distinction of party, are probably pleased by the much atthe States. Is it possible to construct out of these three wishes, a sort of in-ternational commercial union of the three countries concerned? The idea is that the States should grant British commodities some preference, in order that Britain might be willing to share with the States the preference of Can-ada; and that Canada should be, in a protectionist sense, compensated by ectionist sense, compensated by access to U.S. markets, for exfree access to U.S. markets, for extending preference to the republic. Everybody present stared at the notion; none regarded it as immediately practicable, since the senate at Washington is so obstructive; but it is at least worth pondering and worth discussing, besides being a sign of the times, inasmuch as it was gravely propounded by an American.

Even a limited enquiry into the operation of the government postoffice sav-ings bank system, shows that officialis look upon the service more as one rendered to cater to a public insistemce, rather than as a real pro-gressive savings bank system. At present the fund centres in Ottawa, and a depositor desiring to withdraw any amount must forward his voucher there. Red tape methods decree that a depositor in Toronto entering hils withdrawal slip here Monday evenmis withdrawat saip here Monday even-ing, will be able to get the cash on Wednesday morning. The farther from Ottawa, the more time it takes, so that when one reaches Winnipeg, the operation of drawing $10 takes four days, and ten days in British Colum-bia.

Instead of the government competing with the regular banks to obtain a fair percentage of deposits of the domestic business, the department reduces, the rates of interest on money in keeping with the regular bank rate. The government allowed four per cent. a year. The banks fixed their rate at 3 1-2 per cent., and the government followed suit. Both bank and govern ment rates are now level at 3 per cent., but the department compounds interest only once a year.

Postal officials here think the idea of having a number of central offices holding funds for a district should work out well. They point out that even the commercial accounts are not encouraged, yet the man of small savings when he does want to withdraw an account, desires the funds quickly. The result would be that from three central offices from three central offices, headquarters would be established at a dozen or more points in Canada, where funds would be available much more speedily than at present.
