Imperial Oil to Prospect in Far North

EDMONTON, Alta., April 10.—The Imperial Oil Company will seek a definite decision on the oil prospects in the Canadian Arctic this summer. The company which has been drilling at Fort Norman since 1921, hopes this year to establish the true worth of the field.

The party under the command of Angus Sutherland, who superintended the operations last summer, will leave here for Fort Norman as soon as it is possible to travel. Going by way of the Nelson river they will avoid Great Slave lake and will be able to reach their destination quicker than if they waited for the ice to clear from this body of water. With the best of luck, however, it is not likely that the party will reach Fort Norman before July 1.

When the prospectors reach the fort, they will continue drilling No. 2 well, which now is down 800 feet. They will push the hole down another 500 feet to the same depth at which oil was struck in No. 1 well.

Great care has been exercised in drilling this hole in order not to freeze in the casing, as happened in the case of the first well. The company's plans for the future will depend largely on the result of this summer's drilling.

Strike Causes an Exodus

GLACE BAY, N.S., April 15.—"As a result of the industrial tie-up Glace Bay has lost and is losing many of its best citizens to the United States," says the Glace Bay Gazette which continues:

"In the four weeks that have passed since the strike began upwards of sixty residents of the town have left for the States the majority of them having secured employment in Boston and New York. A number secured employment in Detroit, Pittsburgh and Chicago.

"Many other local young men are only waiting until the opening of the shipping season and if they find that the period of idleness at the mines is to be prolonged beyond this point they contemplate seeking other fields. Not only are the younger men leaving the community but entire families propose leaving Glace Bay and the mining areas for good and settling down in the country to the south."

England Faces Ship Competition

UNIONS ARE OBSTACLE.

The man sweeping the streets in Newcastle-on-Tyne is drawing more wages than the skilled artisan in the shipbuilding yards, stated T. E. Thirlaway, Vice-Chairman of the Swan Hunter and Wigham Richardson Company, shipbuilders of Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, who is a guest at the Ritz-Carlton to-day. The wages paid in the sheltered trades such as the railways and on corporation work, are out of proportion to those skilled workmen are receiving in branches of industry where there is keen competition. Mr. Thirlaway said he thinks a readjustment is needed.

Shipbuilding in Britain is very dull indeed. Not more than half the yards are fully employed and many closed entirely. They are suffering from Scandinavian competition, and, what is worse, from German competition. The Germans claimed, he said, that their yards are not being subsidized, and, due to superior efficiency, they were able to quote a price for five important cargo-passenger vessels so much lower than any British firms that a well known English line gave them the contract. Mr. Thirlaway absolutely repudiates the suggestion of greater efficiency.

"We have in Great Britain some very up-to-date and well-organized ship-building establishments." The difference in tenders might partly be due to the lower wages and the longer hours put in by the German workers, who are laboring very hard to regain lost ground. However, this only accounts for a very small part of the difference. The cost of material was as heavy for the Germans as for British builders with the possible exception of steel, but lower steel would not account for the discrepancy.

Union Restrictions.

"Our men are working very well. A lot of them are paid strictly according to results, and no German or any one else could toil harder. We are quite ready to adopt any labor-saving device available, and our men will have to help us in this direction."

In most cases the men individually are loyal and willing to co-operate, but they have difficulty in many cases owing to trade union restrictions. However, the unions are having their eyes opened as a result of the severe competition of the last few years from Holland, due to longer hours and harder work.

In spite of the opposition of the union many suggestions of value are given by the men, and the company has a system whereby they are encouraged to invent devices and also stop wastage of material.

In addition to keener competition, the limitation of armaments has proved another serious factor to injure shipbuilding and firms which were accustomed to have some berths occupied all the year around now have to fill up the gaps. But the greatest bug-bear to shipbuilders and shipowners is high taxation, both imperial and local, he said. Taxes now amount to three and four times as much as before the war. The Germans do not have to pay in taxes anything like the sum which is levied from their British competitors. Transportation charges and the cost of coal will have to come down also before any revival of trade can be looked for. Lower-priced coal is in sight, for the German mines are knocking the bottom out of the coal trade, and France is also getting heavier supplies from the Ruhr, he asserted.

Immigration and Imperial Sentiment

It is axiomatic that the capacity of any country to absorb new citizens without disturbance to its economic and social life must be the factor limiting immigration into it. It must be obvious that a little organization, a certain degree of management, would increase that capacity enormously. The Dominions have the empty spaces, theoretically the capital for development and the suitability of the migrants to settle are the two principal desiderata. Britain offers to provide the capital for direct application to the land, and to train the prospective migrants. Both offers have been made largely in vain because the Dominions have not displayed any real energy in co-operation. Meanwhile migrants from other countries are pouring into Canada and knocking at the door of Australia. It is no thanks to what is done by New Zealand that the same thing is not being experienced here. The moral is that a paramount need exists for a more aggressive sentiment for, and a more practical interest in, the question of settling the British Empire by British people, so that the existing machinery for effective systematized migration may not be left to rust in idleness.—Auckland Weekly News.

For Evening Telegrams. Mr. Hyde—Will you be following. On the way the doors of L.C. Phillip's were thrown open, for the purpose of amusement and relaxation and sombre drama through. Never before of the place was so thronged or so completely patronized.

The entertainment was an appropriate addition to the evening. Rev. A. T. Tully, with his presence, was to act the part of help us out. The play was followed by a game, which consisted of items humorous.

Perhaps, as the composed one of the play would be the most enjoyed of the programme. However, to judge which greeted the farmers, it is safe to say that the play was followed by a game, which consisted of items humorous.
