Business Men of Today:
The business men of today should get more enjoyment out of life, do more for others and not so much for themselves. They should live more in books, more in the open and less at their desks. In this way better health and longer lives would result. More culture in all its forms is exercising a greater influence, which manifests itself in lessened effort along the lines of money-getting. Aristotle said: "The end of labor is to gain leisure," and there is no doubt but that Aristotle was a wise man.

PREJUDICE IN THE CHURCHES

Rev. W. W. McMaster Makes Interesting Statements in Course of His Sermon.

"There is too much prejudice, even in the church," said Rev. W. W. McMaster in his sermon in the Brussels street church yesterday morning, when he took the service in exchange with Rev. A. B. Colton. "Prejudice is responsible for the existence of five Baptist churches in the South End of the city, where at most there should not be more than three."

Mr. McMaster told, in further illustration of his statement, about a congregation he once had, a congregation which was divided into two factions which worshipped together but refused to mingle as brethren. In too many cases of severe prejudice or selfishness, but the joy of human service.

His remarks were based on the meeting of Jesus and the woman of Samaria at Jacob's well. He went fully into the feud between Jews and Samaritans, and showed how Jesus disregarded it, and proclaimed the truth about God as a spirit who must be worshipped in spirit and in truth.

The effect of His teaching upon the woman of Samaria, who left her water-pots to proclaim the gospel, was illustrative of the conduct of every Christian absorbed person. There was no room for prejudice or selfishness, but the joy of human service.

Mr. McMaster made a personal application of the lesson by asking his hearers what their own attitude was toward Christ, and urging them to become Christ-absorbed and follow in His steps.
