BOUGHT AND SOLD. FITZMAMMON LOOUTUR.

How did I with a face so plain, The hand of so lovely a lady gain? What was the spell I breathed in her ear? Only listen—and ye shall hear.

You think, perhaps, I told her that She was my spirit's radiant queen. And * walked in besuty like the night But, no! I was not quite so green !

You think, perhaps, I told her how For her " with tears I strongly shock ;" And how I showed her all my heart ;-I only showed my banker's book.

"You're not so plain !" said she; forthwith I kissed her rosy lips with vigour; "Ah, Fitz, we girls don't mind the face, "We only care about the figure.

"So long as that be good, no girl "Will say, 'Oh, what a frightful man "" "Enlightened maid! my figure is "Just fourteen thousand pounds per ann."

"Still, Sir, to 'honour and obey' "Is a vile phrase; 1 can't consent !" "But, Clara, here's a prettier phrase-"A splendid marriage settlement !

" Be mine, be happy,-for 'tis gold, "Not sentiment, that life can bless, "Will you be mine?" methought her lip "Grew bloodless as she answered-" Yes."

So we were wed, and now we live On some such terms as fire and water, Although she is my lawful wife, For all the world knows that I bought her.

MORAL.

Ye who would marry by THE SCALES, In this, the heart—in that, the gold, Remember, when the Wife is bought, As surely is the Husband " SOLD."
