A Game Which Those Injured In The War Can Enjoy

Much Science in it—Lives, the One-Handed French Professional, Has Shown Game's Possibilities

A writer in The London Times writes as follows in the possibilities of one-handed golf for returned soldiers who have lost an arm in the war—

There is a game which certainly, and for a pathetic reason, is about to come into greater vogue than it has ever had in the past—one-handed golf. So many poor fellows have returned, and are returning from the great war minus a hand or arm that the art of making one hand do the work of two is being practiced very assiduously; and we may deem them relatively fortunate who have not to regret a more grievous loss. It will be interesting to see what the more athletic of them are able to make of this golf stroke dealt with the one arm, and it is a considerable reflection that far more fun is to be had out of the game played with one hand than most people realize, and that it can be brought to a far higher standard than they suppose. An instance in point was Ives, the one-handed French professional, at La Bode. He played a game which would certainly have put him on the scratch mark in the handicap of most of our clubs, and there have been others no less effective in this country.

It is wonderful to see the distance that the ball can be driven with the one hand, but what is more interesting is that there are some strokes in the game which can be done really better with the one hand than with two. The present writer has been assured by a friend who has worked at the one-handed game a good deal, that you can get out of a cramped place in a hazard far better with one hand than with two. And there is no doubt whatever that a skilled one-handed player can put much more cut on the ball, can make it sit down much more dead when it pitches off the approach stroke, than any man can with the two-handed grip.

Specialty Designed Clubs.

If you consider the matter for a moment you will see that this must be so. With the one hand the quick turn of the wrist can be put in just as the club comes to the ball, much in the same way as it is applied in the racket stroke. Try to put on cut with a racket held in the two hands, and you will see at once that you are at a grievous disadvantage. You feel tied up and helpless.

All this can be done, and has been done, with the clubs as commonly used in the game, and with no special study given to the needs of a player who has lost an arm. It remains to be seen what developments are possible when attention is paid to those needs. One of the largest of the athletic outfitting firms is making trial of various weights, lengths, and lies of clubs specially designed to suit the one-handed. It seems likely that they will be much helped by a shaped grip, that is to say, a grip in which the grooves for the fingers and thumb rest in. In this way a greatly added steadiness and force of grip is given, and it also affords a tactile guide, supplementary to the guidance of the eye, for the direction of the stroke. The player is able to feel, as well as to see,

DENIES THAT STALLINGS WILL SUCCEED HAUGHTON AS MANAGER OF BRAVES

Boston, Sept. 30.—This morning Boston's baseball fans were startled by the publication of a rumor, stated to be well founded, that next year George Stallings, now manager of the Boston Braves, will succeed Fred Mitchell as manager of the Boston Red Sox.

The reason given for Haughton's proposed retirement was that he has such important business interests outside of baseball that he cannot devote the time he wishes to baseball.

It took Treasurer Arthur C. Wise, of the Boston Club, less than five seconds to deny the rumor this morning.

"You may go as far as you like," he said, "in making my denial strong. There is absolutely nothing in any such story, and it is the most absurd rumor that ever has been connected with the Boston Club since I have known anything about the affairs of the team."

"Mr. Haughton is going to remain president of the Braves, and Mr. Stallings has a long contract with us as manager. We signed Mitchell for three years because we appreciate his work to the Boston club."

"I shall remain treasurer, and Mr. Haughton has no idea in the world of resigning for any cause whatever. We have been busy during the past few days figuring how the team can be strengthened for next year, and only a day or two ago Manager Stallings told us he wanted a ball player, and in turn, was told to go out to get him."

"I have talked over the telephone this morning with President Haughton, and read him the stories about his intention to resign. He has known since I then told him how emphatically I had denied them, and he thanked me."

"There is absolutely no trouble in our camp. Mr. Haughton has allowed Mr. Stallings full rein with the management of the ball club, and will continue to do so."

"Perhaps because the team has not made the record expected this season, the reason for rumors about this being a change of officers for next year. But there is no foundation whatever for such rumors."

"There is nothing more to say about the matter except to state that Mr. Stallings is going to remain president of the Boston Braves, and that we expect to sign him to his contract as the manager of the club."

"Any one who knows Haughton realizes that he will not quit just because the reason for rumors about this being a change of officers for next year. He is already planning for next year's campaign and dropping out of baseball is the thing farthest from his mind."

Haughton's Denial.

President Percy D. Haughton of the Braves, laughed this morning when informed of the rumor regarding his resignation. "Yes, I have been told about that rumor," he said, "but there is no foundation for it. I shall read the story by and by, but this morning have not had time."

"I do wish to be just as emphatic in my denial of any intent on my part to part company with the Braves as Mr. Wise has been. I am president of the club and shall continue president."

"If an giving every attention to the affairs of the club, and am looking forward to what we can do to make a fight for the finish this year, and also to put in every additional foundation for our club another season."

Both Mr. Haughton and Mr. Wise deny the rumor, and are looking forward to the season's end with the club. That is what Mr. Haughton said in 1917.

Story Ridiculous, Says Manager Stallings

New York, Sept. 30.—In regard to the report that George T. Stallings was to become president of the Boston National League Club, Mr. Stallings says this morning:

"The story is ridiculous. I have no desire to become president of any club, I am a manager and will be a manager as long as I am in baseball."

Fred Mitchell said in regard to the becoming manager—

"That is the fourth job as manager that I have been offered according to reports, and it is probably as true as long as I am in baseball. I will stick around and help Manager Stallings. That is what my contract with the Boston Club calls for."

when he has the club traveling in the right line. A point that becomes evident as one practices the single-handed swing is that the ball must not be too near the right foot. It does not seem to pay to take up a stance like that for the lifting mallet stroke. It is better to stand rather "open." In this way a flatter trajectory of swing is attained. It is a stroke in which there is almost a main feature of the double-handed operation. We may look forward to much amusement from this one-handed golf in the future, and it is quite possible that it may have some interesting and surprising revelations in store for us.

THE BIG LEAGUES

Red Sox Clinch American League Pennant—Race Undecided in National

The Red Sox have again reached their goal and have won the championship of the American League. A victory over the New York Yankees while Cleveland was defeating Chicago gave them the undoubted title. The team has three games to play with Philadelphia and Manager Carrigan will in all probability begin to rest his regulars and get them in condition for the coming World's series. Dutch Leonard won his game on Saturday in fine style allowing only five hits in ten innings. Dutch, however, is like a ship without a rudder when any other catcher than Carrigan is at the receiving end.

The National League pennant winner is still undecided and may not be until the last game has been played. Philadelphia and Brooklyn are running neck and neck. The former have the edge at present and stand a better chance of winning than their opponents. Now that the Giants' great winning streak has been broken the Dodgers should find the going much easier than they anticipated. A reaction will in all probability set in after such a strenuous run and the Dodgers should be able to hold their own with them. If they succeed in doing so and the Braves are able to split their six game series with the Phillies the championship will be played in Brooklyn, if they fail the scene of the big encounter will be in Philadelphia.

Comie Mack failed to win the pennant but he succeeded in establishing a new record for games lost. The team lost 116 games this season.

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 29.—Al Bridwell, formerly a member of the New York Nationals, Chicago Nationals and St. Louis Federal League Club, has signed to manage the Milwaukee team of the American Association during the season of 1917, according to reports given out by members of the team. President Al Time of the club refused to confirm the report. Bridwell is an infielder and usually plays shortstop.
