Fifty thousand posters carrying the inscription: "Before another Christmas still less of armament and none of war," an adaptation of President Harding's phrase in his speech at the opening of the Washington conference, have been sent out to these organizations.

Libraries throughout the country have been asked to arrange "world peace shelves," and community choruses have been asked to sing the peace carol, "Hark the Herald Angels Sing," at nine o'clock Christmas Eve.

London, Ont., Dec. 21.—For fourteen years Relief Inspector McCallum has received a note for $20 from some unknown person who asked that the money be used to assist the needy at Christmas. PATROLMAN KILLED BY CRAZED NEGRO Fifty Shots are Fired to Subdue Shell Shock Victim — Cries of "Lynch Him" Follow Arrest of Ex-Soldier.

Long Branch, N. J., Dec. 21.—Patrolman Herman A. Emmons was shot and killed while on duty at Broadway and Third avenue by Ernest Williams, a negro, believed to have been crazed as a result of shell shock during the war. The shooting was in the heart of the Long Branch business district with many women shoppers near by. Williams reloaded his revolver and fired, firing at his pursuers, and was captured after making a stand in a rear yard of a house in Second avenue. He fired more than fifty shots.

There was no warning of the shooting, according to witnesses. Williams approached the patrolman, and while not more than twenty feet away drew the revolver and fired four times. One bullet pierced Emmons' throat and another entered his chest.

As the patrolman dropped to the street, women screamed and ran into the stores. Williams, with the revolver drawn, pointed it at men nearest him and retreated up the street. A crowd gathered, some rushing to Emmons. Williams fired two more shots and then began reloading. All along the street as the negro passed women fled into doorways and men drew back. Then Patrolmen Ducho and De Santis arrived, and with revolvers drawn, dashed for the negro. He fled, turning at intervals to fire at the pursuers.

He ran into Belmont avenue and then backed into the yard of the house in Second avenue, where he took up his stand and blazed away as the crowd closed in. The officers returned the fire, but because of his concealment, could not see Williams and failed to hit him. The negro gave up when his supply of cartridges was exhausted. Ducho and De Santis dashed over a fence and leaped upon Williams. The crowd followed and endeavored to take the negro from them, shouting "Lynch him!" Williams was beaten and kicked before the policemen could get him to the street, where they put him in a taxicab and took him to the City Hall Police Station. Later they transferred him to the county jail at Freehold for safety.

Emmons died on the way to Monmouth Hospital. He was married and lived in Union avenue, near the scene of the shooting. In the negro district the police learned that several attempts had been made to have Williams committed to an asylum, as his neighbors said he had been acting "queerly." He appeared to be acting suspiciously last night, and it was feared he would cause trouble, the police were told, but no one notified the authorities. Williams was said to have told the police he had a grudge against Emmons, declaring that the latter recently had compelled him to stop playing a game of cards.

MUSIC FROM A MIRROR.
How a Barber Came to Make First Organ.

More than two thousand years ago a barber in Alexandria discovered that in moving his mirror air was forced through the tubes, which were common in mirrors at that time. This caused a curious musical sound to be emitted. So struck was he by this peculiarity that he set about making an instrument which was the foundation of the modern organ.

After several experiments he made a water-fute, in which air was forced by bellows through an inverted cone which led to flutes controlled by a keyboard, the pressure being kept uniform by water.

After a thousand years a rival instrument made its appearance. This was a similar pattern, but, instead of water, weights regulated the pressure. In 951 an organ was erected at Winchester, England. It had twenty-six bellows and ten pipes to each key. The two men who sat at the keyboard "blew and sweated enormously."

Later, a firm of organ makers in Germany succeeded in erecting the first really big instrument. The primary stops did not differ very much from those of today, although various novelties were introduced.

Among the innovations were the nightingale and cuckoo stops, while others represented cockcrow and goat-bleating. Though these novelties have fallen into disuse, an organ with one of these nightingale stops is still to be seen in Rome.

It was not until the nineteenth century that the problem of the regulation of air pressures was solved by introduction of the hydraulic blower. Amongst the largest organs in world are the Harlem instrument, which possesses sixty stops and 8,000 pipes; Albert Hall organ, with 123 stops; organ in St. George's Hall, Liverpool with 110 stops; one in St. Louis, U. S., which boasts 150 stops and one Sydney town hall with 120 stops.
