cousin to fix up and put her best foot foremost, in order to catch a beau, "she look'd so green in her country attire." The country lass looked comically into the face of her rather faded relative, and replied, "Better green than withered."

What are you looking for?—A man was angry with his wife, as was often the case, either because she talked too much, or contradicted him, or for some other reason; in short, he was out of humour with her, and resolved not to speak to her for a long, long time. He kept his resolution for a few days very strictly. One evening he is lying in bed and wishes to sleep: he draws his nightcap over his ears, and his wife may say what she will, he hears nothing of it. The wife then takes a candle, and carries it to every hole and corner; she removes stools, and chairs, and tables; and looks carefully behind them. The husband sits up in bed, and gazes inquiringly at her movements: he thinks that the din must have an end at last. But he is mistaken. His wife keeps on looking and searching. The husband loses patience and cries, "What are you looking for?" "For your tongue," she answers, "and now that I have found it, tell me why you are angry." Hereupon they become good friends again.

The only passion which age does not blunt is avarice; which, the longer we live, only becomes the keener.

"My dear boy," said a kind-hearted country school-mistress to a pupil whose quarter was about up, "My dear boy, does your father design that you should tread the intricate and thorny path of the professions, the straight and narrow way of the ministry, or revel amid the flowery fields of literature?" "No, marm," said the juvenile, "dad says he is going to set me to work in the tatar patch."

The old Dutch painters of flowers mostly worked on a black ground. The value of this arrangement may be easily leave it till cold. In this way the colours are rendered permanent, will not fade by subsequent washing. So says a lady who has made the experiment herself.

COMPOST—It is in the power of every cultivator of the soil to increase the quantity of his manure at least one half. He may also, by proper management, greatly augment its value, or, what is tanta-
