ters the eye.
A photographic plate can see far more than the human eye is capable of seeing: in fact, it can see twice as many stars as are visible to the human eyes, aided by the most powerful telescope. Not only is this the case, but it is able to split what seems to the human eye a single star into a number of astral bodies.

The photographic plate is also able to detect flaws in metal which are invisible to the sight of man. Recent investigations show that there are endess forms of light, or, as men of less forms of light, or, as men of science call them, vibrations of the ether, which we cannot see. The famous X-rays, and those which are utilized in wireless telegraphy, are merely peculiar kinds of light, to which we are persently blind by reason of the limitations. fectly blind by reason of the limitations of our own senses.
