No careful business man going over the statement that I have made, and hope that I have succeeded in showing that this expenditure was a fair one and would have been within the estimate but for the extraordinary expenditure incurred by the smallpox epidemic and other causes. I now take up estimated receipts of 1901 and I think they will show that there is a brighter side to the picture. We calculated upon a revenue of $1,030,000 and an estimated expenditure of $808,000 and an estimated expenditure at a presendent and at a province at a presendent and at a province at a credit of the province, but this year it is otherwise. The provincial secretary admits a deficit of some $42,000. Ile at-tributes this to various causes. One was that the great freshet last fall which did much damage to our roads and bridges made necessary large expenditures of money in repairs and was partially re-sponsible for the deficit, and the govern-ment went so far as to put a statement to this effect in the mouth of his honor in delivering the speech from the throne. He submitted that it was not right to public debt, and said that during the satement like that in the mouth of public debt, and said that during the past four years the public debt had in-creased nearly half a million dollars, and thought that it evidenced rash and reck less management of the affairs of the prov-tine. The province is going behind every wear despite the fact that the pro-sine fiscal year ended October 31st, 1960, on account of the damage done by the freshet last fall. the denert of last year. The provincial secretary knows, the government knows that not a single dollar was spent in the fiscal year ended October 31st, 1960, on account of the damage done by the freshet last fall.

The provincial secretary, last evening, in connection with that same expenditure, said that he did not propose to take it out of the ordinary grants to roads and out of the ordinary grants to roads and bridges, but to change it to capital ac-count and issue bonds. In this he prac-tically admits that so unsatisfactory is the financial condition that the moment any unforseen expenditure is necessary the province has to rush deeper into debt and add to its interest charges.

Another statement in the budget speech was that the interest on the permanent bridge account must be paid out of the grant to roads and bridges. Consequently as the expenditure upon permanent bridges grows from year to year and the interest charge multiplies so will the an-nual grant to reads and bridges grow less. Mr. Flemming took up the question of the revenue and claimed that the expenditure was increasing more rapidly than the revenues. He asked the provincial secretary where he proposed to get in-creased revenue. He did not think that the census would show any material m-
