Editor's Talk

ONCE a year The Canadian Courier prints an account on the fall revival of business by issuing an Industrial Number. That issue this year will be on August 23, the day of the opening of the Canadian National Exhibition. It will be a different sort of number from any of its predecessors. There is a human side to manufacturing which people who buy food and clothes and houses and motor cars are often too busy to notice. Last year we published more than fifty photographs of factories and their workers. This year we shall pay more attention to the people who pay the wages and those who get them. There will be several brief illustrated character sketches of leading manufacturers; articles on conditions affecting the kind of goods people buy; the experience of labour; the areas of power; the future and character of manufacturing communities; recent movements that affect the well-being of labour in a country which, on a basis of population, has no equal for bulk and quality of manufacturing.

The number will be bright and snappy; well illustrated and interesting to every Canadian. It will also be—optimistic.

This week we publish mainly a fiction number; casually, the best of that kind we ever got out.
