

and collected "on the spot," of places made sacred to all Methodists by their association with the Wesleys. It was resolved to carry out the idea. The trip to England was undertaken; the negatives were made, sometimes under trying circumstances and against unreasonable opposition; the information and data were kindly furnished by the then best historian of Methodism living, and this book is the result. If it shall prove of value as an educator to the Methodists of America, the labor and expense will not have been in vain.

G. W. E.