Relic of Charles I. In an article in The Practitioner de-voted to the subject of Royal relics special mention is made of certain bones from the neck of Charles I, at one time in the possession of Sir Henry Raiford, physician to George III, and to three other Sovereigns. The coffin of the beheaded King was discovered and the state of the s The coffin of the beheaded King was discovered and identified in 1818 when it was found in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, alongside those of Henry VIII. and Jane Seymour. The skin of the face was dark and discolored: but the forehead and temples retained their shape, though the cartilage of the nose was gone. The pointed beard was perfectly preserved, as was also the general shape of the face. All present were struck with the resemblance to Vandyke's portraits. Nothing had been done to attach the severed head to the trunk, and it was taken out, Sir Henry Halford says, and held up to view.

When the precess of resoldering the leaden coffin had been completed it was found that a portion of the vertebra had become separated from the neck and fallen cutside the coffin unnoticed. This relic was presented by the Prince Resent te Sir Henry Halford, by whom a case of lignum vitue lined with gold was made for its reception, a suitable inscription being engraved on the fid. Sir Henry St. John Maiford disposed of the scandal created by his forebear in retaining the relic by making over the case with its contents to the Prince of Waiss (now King Edward), by whose orders it was deposited on King Charles' coffin.

The Clever Parson Bird. The Clever Parson Bird.

Among the feathered inhabitants of New Zealand there is a bird called the parson bird, or "tai." It is about the size and shape of a blackbird, but has a pair of delicate white tufts at its throat, and is a glossy dark green otherwise, which looks bläck in the sunlight. It can be taught to crow, to speak, to whistle tunes, and besides these tricks it has a repertoire which is not often equalied by any other feathered songster.

Stone Sales For Shoes. An inventor has hit upon a method of putting what are practically stone soles on boots and shoes. He mixes a waterproof glue with a suitable quantity of clean quartz sand and spreads it over the leather sole used as foundation. These quartz soles are said to be very flexible and practically indestructible and to give the foot a firm hold even on the most slippery surface.

- Earringed Cows.

While our health authorities tag beef cattle after they have been slaughtered, Belgian cows are thus decorated by the Government when they reach the age of three months.

The tag is a preventive measure and is designed to check the spread of infection from tuberculosis through the introduction from other countries of diseased cattle.

As soon as a calf becomes three months old it is inspected by a Government official, who enters its mark and sex in a record book and provides it with a number tag, which is fastened to a ring passed through its ear.

The breeder is compelled to keep a record of the animal and promptly notity the officials of its sale that it may be true distanced and the sex he in the conditions for twenty-fermions of the animal and promptly notity the officials of its sale that it may be true distanced and the sex he in the conditions for twenty-fermions of the animal and promptly notity the officials of its sale that it may be true of the conditions of the sale that it may be true of the conditions of the sale that it may be true of the conditions of the sale that it may be true of the conditions of the conditio

Matters of Eyesight.

Oddly enough the best eyesight is found at the equacor and in the vicinity of the North Pole.

Good eyesight is dependent upon the country, and barren wastes broken by few objects develop a keenness of eyesight amazing to the city bred man. An Esquimau will detect a white for stealing along the snow covered waste at an incredible distance and will discern objects where the traveler sees only a field of blinding white.

The Arab of the desert is gifted with similar keenness of vision, and can pick out objects at a distance of from one to five miles. Of the civilized races the Norwegian is best provided with the surroundings for good eyesight, and the city bred man, untrained to the use of his eyes for distances of more than a few blocks, has the shortest range of vision of all.

A country boy will see an animal at a distance of a mile where his city cousin will detect only the heavy masses of light and shade, and he can recognize a particular horse at a distance of half a mile.

The plainsman of the West has the best eyesight of all the Americans, the wide sweep of country developing his vision through the absence of obstacles tending to shorten the range.
