At the western end of the line the allied infantry gathered in the trenches and simultaneously at various points crept out and advanced cautiously in wide open lines towards the German positions. MUST SHAM DEATH.

Wounded Are Shot By Germans II They Call For Help.

A representative of The Matin, of Paris, has seen and spoken with a woulded French officer who is now in Paris. He is a young Breton, a lieutenant of the Dragoons, who received his wound-or, rather, his wounds, one of which was dealt by a German lieutenant while he was lying halfunconscious on the field of battlein a skirmish on the banks of the Mouse. He said that his captain ordered him to econnoitre with several of his men in the neighborhood of d Miss Longuyon. When he reached Lon-aims- guyon he halted and visited the hospital, where a dozen French wounded were lying.

One of them said to him, "Let me give you a piece of advice. If you are hit, sham dead, otherwise they will finish you off." "I thought." says the lieutenant, "that these words were the hallucination of a dying man, and paid no attention to them. I was very wrong. Shortly afterwards the Mayor of Longuyon told me that German chasseurs had been seen near Beuville. I called my men, and we started. We saw no Germans in the village, but on the other side of it we came across two chasseurs, who galloped off when they saw us. We pursued them, and 400 hundred yards further on we came upon their main body.

"I told my four dragoons to rally at a farm 500 yards behind, and, in spite of the difference of numbers between us and the enemy's force, ordered a charge. We were received by a volley, but not one of us was hit. At a hundred yards distance from the enemy, my horse fell dead, bringing me down with him. I must must have been hit at the same mo ment, for I felt a sharp pain in my shoulder. My orderly fell at my side Then I fainted.

"A little time after, having recov ered consciousness, I called feebly fo help. A German soldier came up and seeing that I was an officer, called his commander, whom I after wards learned to be von Schaffen burg, of the Chasseurs of Prague He came up behind me, took my pistol, and fired, point blank, a shot at me, that hit me in the stomach. I fainted again. What happened afterwards I learned from my orderly, whom I had thought to be dead, but who had merely shammed death. The German officer, it appears, kent my German officer, it appears, kept my revolver, stole my field glasses, and searched my pockets, taking from them the sum of 200 francs in gold. searched my pockets, taking from them the sum of 200 francs in gold. "It was then 11 o'clock. I lay there unconscious under the burning sun till half-past twelve. Then I felt somebody tapping my head, and heard a familiar voice saying, 'Mon Lieutenant, are you dead?" It was my orderly, whom the Germans had left alone, thinking he was dead; but not before they had taken from his pockets the few francs he possessed. I asked him to go to the village and fetch a vehicle, which he did. In it I was taken to Longuyon, where I received first aid. To-day am almost convalescent and I hop in a few weeks to be able to return to the front."

PARISIANS ARE QUIET.

A Stereotyped Note Is All They Hea of Their Loved Ones.

One looking for excitement in the Paris streets these days will not find it, says a correspondent writing from that city. Quiet women are seen go-ing about, a few foreign men, but seldom a Frenchman of middle years. Most of the shops are closed, and the cafes and restaurants which are open, shut early.

The butcher, the barber, all our usual public servants, are off to the front. It is useless to inquire if news is received by those left behind. The ones who have gone have just stepped out into a guif by which they have been swallowed up by the enor-mous "zone of operations." Their families may write to them in special envelopes addressed to the War Office. But that is all the address there is on those envelopes. The ones at home will never know where the soldiers are fighting unless they come home again, so secretly and silently is this war of wars being waged.

If they never appear, the family will receive a simple card from the Making a marked contrast to conditions in Berlin, there are still many Germans here. They go about quiet-ly, and are not molested. The French sense of honor is high.
