there some complication here? I had never seen John and did not see how John could be mixed up with an affair I had supposed to be a secret between James and myself, but when Philemon laid the matter before James he did not deny that John was guilty, but asked that you be not told before your marriage. He knew that you were engaged to a good man, a man that your father approved, a man that could aid would make you happy. He did not want to be the means of a second break, and besides—this, I think, was at the bottom of the stand he took, for James Zabel was always the proudest man I ever knew—he never could brag, he said, to give to one like Agatha a name which he knew and she knew was not entirely free from reproach. It would stand in the way of his happiness and ultimately of hers. "But your father's disapproval was so while he loved you still, his only prayer was that after you were safely married and Philemon was sure of your affection he should tell you that the man you once regarded so favorably was not unworthy of that regard. "But Philemon has kept silent, while I—Agatha, who are you doing? Are you mad, my child?"

"She looked so for the moment. Tearing off the ring she had worn but an hour, she flung it on the floor. Then she threw her arms high up over her head and burst out in a awful voice: "Curses on the father! Curses on the husband who has ever combined to make me rue the day I was born! The father I cannot disown, but the husband—"

"It was Mr. Gilchrist who dared her to do this," Philemon said nothing. "Hush! He was the father of your children. Don't curse!"

But she only towered the higher, and her beauty from being simply majestic became appalling. "Children!" she cried. "If ever I bear children to this man, may the blight of heaven strike them as it has struck mine this day. May they die as my hopes have died, or, if they live, may they bruise his heart as mine is bruised and curse their father as!"

Here I fled the house. I was shaking as if this awful denunciation had fallen on my own head. But before the door closed behind me a different cry called me back. Mr. Gilchrist was lying lifeless on the floor, and Philemon, the patient, tender Philemon, had taken her there as if the words she had showered upon him had been blessing instead of the most fearful curses which had ever left the lips of mortal woman.

A STEP FOWARD FOR WELSH BILL

Opposition Failed to Divide Measure Into Two Parts.

The Welsh Church Bill is now ready for the third reading, the preliminary stages having been completed on Monday and Tuesday. On the former day the House of Commons went into Committee on the money resolutions of the Bill. Mr. McKenna moving the resolution authorising the issue, out of the Consolidated Fund, of sums necessary for payment of principal and interest of money borrowed by the Welsh Commissioners under the powers conferred by the Bill.

In doing so he said there was not the smallest ground for the statement that public money would be used for the purpose of bringing the Bill into effect. At the beginning the Commissioners would not be able to meet the great claims made upon their revenues, and it was proposed that the Treasury should guarantee any loan which they might have to raise. In the event of there being no commutation, the loan could not exceed more than a few thousand pounds.

On the other hand, if there was commutation, they might have to borrow a very large sum, in order to pay out the life interests. As the life interests fell in, the revenues would, of course, increase, and in a few years the Commissioners would be able not only to pay out of them the cost of their office, but to repay any loans they might have raised.

Two Million Loan If commutation were accepted the Welsh Commissioners would have to borrow a sum exceeding £2,000,000, and unless they could do so with a Treasury guarantee they could not hope to offer to the disestablished Church anything like as good commutation terms.

These resolutions Mr. Cripps described as mean and petty, but Mr. Booth replied with the opinion that the Government's cumulative scheme was a good business transaction, the terms being much better than those given in the case of the Irish Church. When the allotted three hours for the discussion had been filled, the guillotine fell, and after a division, it was decided by a Government majority of 111, that the resolution be reported to the House.

When on Tuesday, the Committee's resolution came before the House, a division was challenged, but the resolution as reported was agreed to by 313 to 98—a Government majority of 215.

On the motion that the House go into Committee on the Bill, Mr. Hume Williams moved that the Committee have power to divide the Bill into two Bills, one dealing with the disestablishment and the other with the disendowment of the Church in Wales.

His object, he said, was to give the House an opportunity of registering separate opinions upon two questions which were equally distinct. Mr. Hoare seconded.

Mr. McKenna said that no practical good could result from the acceptance of the motion. The only result would be that two divisions would be necessary instead of one. On a division the instruction was negatived by 306 to 199—majority 107.

The King's Interests Mr. McKenna announced that he had received a message from the King stating that his Majesty had been pleased to place at the disposal of Parliament for the purposes of the Bill his interests in the bishoprics and other ecclesiastical dignities and benefices in Wales and Monmouthshire.

The House then formally went into Committee on the Bill, and on the question that the Bill be reported without amendment to the House, the voting was—

For the motion..... 309 Against..... 204 Government majority..... 105 Ministers' Shares.

Mr. Ronald McNeill on Thursday asked the Prime Minister whether it was the intention of the Government to reopen negotiations with the Marconi Company for the supply of wireless stations throughout the Empire; whether such negotiations would be entered upon while shares in the Marconi Company of America continued to be held by the Ministers of the Crown, and by the trustee of the funds of the Liberal party.

Mr. Asquith: With regard to the first part of the question, the Postmaster-General hopes to make a statement at an early date. With regard to the last part, I understand that all the persons referred to have taken steps to divest themselves of any interest in the shares of the American company.

Foreigners of New York have organized an association for welfare objects.
