CHAPTER XXXV.

It was almost autumn, and people were saying to each other smilingly that summer seemed unwilling to go. The wheat was standing now in great golden sheaves, the fruit hung r pe upon the trees.

When morning a letter came to Ravensmere. It was from Lady Hamilton, to say that she was returning from Cowes, where the had been staying some time, and would be glad to pay her promised visit.

woman been staying some time, and would be gied to pay her promised visit.

Lord Caraven's first sensation on reading the coquettish little note was not one of namitigated pleasure. They had been spending a very happy week alone, the Earl, the Countees and Sir Raoul—a week that he had thoroughly enjoyed, because the greater part of it had been spent in the open air with his wife and Sir Raoul—a week that he had thoroughly enjoyed, because the greater part of it had been spent in the open air with his wife and Sir Raoul—a week that he head to such a face? He must have the part of it had been spent in the open air with his wife and Sir Raoul—a week that he been shind. He crossed the room to where he young Countess stood talking to Lady Hamilton.

"Hiddred,' he said simply, 'will you save one dance for me?"

She looked at the pretty tablets, and then smiled at him.

"If am not engaged for the next waltz," she said.

"Then give it to me," requested the Earl, and the dark eyes were raised to his.

"If I had been engaged, I should have ladded the country of the said to the said, "If I had been engaged, I should have ladded the said, "If I had been engaged, I should have ladded the said.

The young Countess looked up.
"We are a party," she told him

are three. "
Lord Caraven laughed.
"Three is a very small number, Hildred.
What would Lady Hamilton say if she came here and found that we had not invited any one to meet her? Raoul and I would be exhausted by the amount of homage we should have to pay. Lady Campbell is the very queen of coquettes."
"I do not like coquettes," said Lady Caraven curtly. "It would be wonderful if you did,"

"It would be wonderful if you did," langhed her husband, "Dark-eyed and dark-haired women like you, Hildred, are generally severe; golden hair and blue eyes take naturally to flirtation. But that is no settlement of our difficulty. There is but one course open to us—to write and say we shall be delighted. You will write, of voourse?"

"She is beautiful," he repeated to himself. He had suddenly awoke to the knowledge of the fact. He said to himself that he must have been blind. Had this woman been any other than his wife, he prayed the Earl to sing one song.

aid. Lady Hamilton was not quite pleased. Lady Hamilton was not quite pleased. Two suns could not shine in one hemi-sphere; and if Lady Caraven had any idea of outshining her the sooner that idea was abandoned the better.

"It is rather odd," she said, with one of her brightest smiles, "to see hueband and wife waltz together—one would imagine you wite wantz togetars were still lovers."

Hildred was on the point of retorting that they had never been that, but prudence restrained her.
"You will not forget your promise?"

said the Earl.

"For the waltz—no," she replied.

"Oh, don't talk to me that way! If I can't get you to arbitrate, why I've got to strike. I don't care if it does block the wheels of trade."
"But, Mary, you don't understand."
"Oh, yes, I do I I've made my demands, and they've been refused. I've asked for arbitration, with a view to compromise, and that has also been refused. A strike is all that there is left, and I've struck."
"But your demands are unreasonable."
"You're no judge."
"You're no judge."
"You're the judge of your own demands when you strike, and I'm just as good a judge as you are when I want something. It's no use talking. This strike is on."
She folded her arms in a determined way and he subsided. It was perhaps half an hour later when he looked up and asked:
"Mary, is the strike still on?"
"It is still on," she replied.
"Aren't you hungry?"
No. I saw that I had something in the treasury before the strike was ordered."

BO STONES GROW?

Well No, Not Fxactly, but Some Get Bigge The question in the headline is often asked, and not infrequently by scholarly people too. By way of a general sessure to all such questions I would say that the best people too. By way of a general answer to all such questions I would say that the best authorities have come to this conclusion: I hat rocks do not grow in the sense that plants do. They may increase in size by means of accretions, and they may also undergo other changes. Old sea beds litted up and exposed for ages tecome stratified beds of sandstone or limestone; volcanic ashes and lava strewn over hills and plains become tufa hard enough for building stone, and the pebbly shores of rivers and smaller streams may sometimes thange into conglemerates. The simple mineral, however, does grow, especially when it takes upon itself the form of a crystal. A sparkling prism of quartz increases from an atom to a monster crystal of varying length and size by what geologists know as a "process of addition and assimilation." This process is wonderfully slow, but with a mathematical exactnes that is a suprise to persons even "well up' in the science of geology. In one sense stones grow, in another they do not. The crystal may become longer and longer, but the boulder on the roadside will not increase a hair's breadth in length or width in the next 10,000 years.—St. Zonis Republican.
