TAKE PENSION RATES FROM PARLIAMENT?

Is Pointed Out that Endless Squabbling Will Ensue, if Not Done.

Ottawa, Jan. 2—A proposal has been made and is favored by some of the Cabinet Ministers that the subject of pensions should be taken away from Parliament and placed under the jurisdiction of an independent commission with authority similar to the Railway Commission. The present Pensions Commission is independent of politics, as far as administration goes, but it has no authority in regard to the rates of pensions, which are either fixed by Parliament or by order-in-council.

Those who favor this plan point out that as long as pensions are fixed by Parliament there will be an annual squabble in the House and a scramble for higher rates. Members will be influenced by representations of certain classes from their constituencies and will be more interested in votes than justice. Those who favor the plan want to prevent some of the scandals of the American pension system. They see no reason why such a commission should not have authority to fix pensions the same as the railway commission has to fix railway rates.

They point out that if Parliament fixed railway rates there would be nothing but confusion and perhaps disaster. Such a commission could sit in different parts of the country to hear complaints and would make all regulations and rates subject to appeal, as in the case of judgment of the railway commission, to the governor-general-in-council.

Such a proposal would without doubt meet with strong opposition from Parliament. The cabinet as a whole has not yet considered the proposal.

MILITANT CHAPLAIN.

Man Who Will Not Tolerate Americans Who Are Unpatriotic.

An idea of the treatment which the American Bolsheviki (if there are any such) may expect after our military forces are demobilized can be gleaned from a letter from Lieutenant Beard, Chaplain of the 346th Machine Gun Battalion, now in France, Chaplain Beard formerly was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Hoquiam. He has seen active service and his patriotism has not only been intensified but has taken a strongly practical turn. Writing to the Aberdeen Daily World, he says:

"The very first man that I hear say one word against the Government of my country I intend to punch between the eyes just as hard as I can and if he is a foreigner who has lived in Europe under European conditions and should know better, I will add a swift kick with a pair of hob-nailed boots."

The Chaplain admits that this may not sound very "ministerial," but there will be general agreement that no apology is called for. It is the very human and practical expression of the feeling of one who has been through the fire and who is experiencing the realities of life. If this is the sentiment of a Chaplain, having due regard for the restraints of his position, how much more is to be expected from the men who have been his comrades on the battlefields!

There are reasons for believing that those who have loyally supported the flag during the war will be more strongly patriotic than ever, if that is possible, in the days of peace. Those who believe that the slacker, both military and industrial, has been in a negligible minority will view the outcome with optimistic equanimity.

AS ADVERTISED.

The man who is not persuaded that the world is growing better has only to read the advertisements in the newspapers to be convinced. There was a time when a merchant announced merely that he was a dealer in staple and fancy groceries. The dry goods dealer insisted that he had better value and newer stocks than any competitor, but he ended his story there. Advertisers learned, after a time, that people like to read whatever is interesting, and so they have fallen into the way of telling intimate stories about their establishments. There is no more interesting information in the newspapers just now than the advertisements.

ONE KISS TOO MANY

"Is there no trap attached to it, Herr Hadley?"

"On my honor as an American officer!"

"Then I agree," said Bertha, with the skill of a general who tries craftily to hold demoralized troops by ordering them to do what they will otherwise do mutinously.

"Order the handcuffs off Herr Hadley," demanded Von Heimer, "and give your word to attempt no personal harm to the prisoners while they are on my boat."

"I give it. Remove the handcuffs from Herr Hadley."

"Furthermore, I will attack no ship in the Sound or the harbor except in defence. I refuse to be responsible for bringing the United States into the war against the Fatherland, beyond offering no active resistance to this illegal kidnaping."

"Very well! You have more terms than Bismarck."

"I have more scruples. Germany has had too few since the Hohenzollerns went to school to Bismarck."

"Remember, Herr Lieutenant, that you are a subject of the Hohenzollerns."

"Of all of them! We are constantly reminded of it. If the Kaiser remembered more frequently that he is the Emperor of Germany, and less frequently that the Germans are his subjects, the yoke might be lighter. To your posts, men."

Von Heimer glanced at indicators and made a careful study of a chart. Then he looked at a tide table and consulted his watch.

"Twenty feet lower!" he ordered. 'Half speed!"

"I appeal for medical attention and a bed for Miss Nicholson, Von Heimer," said Bert, when the submarine commander had finished his calculations.

"Life is just one medical attention and bed after another," grumbled Marian. "I've had more sleep than anybody here, and much more medical attention. Can't I sit up for any of the fun. I've never been in a submarine before."

"You'v never gone to bed in a submarine before, Madcap," laughed Hadley. "I hope you'll have the experence very soon."

"Prepare my quarters for the Fraulein, Nicholson," Von Heimer ordered, "and ask the surgeon to see that she is comfortable. Her highness will occupy Dusendorf's quarters."

"Miss Nicholson will need help," put in Bertha. "I will attend her."

"Your attentions have been somewhat disquieting so far, Fraulein," Hadley objected:

Bertha's face softened with regret and expostulation.

"You don't understand, Herr Hadley," she began earnestly but gently.

"But I do, Bertha," Marian interrupted. "You'd kill me without remorse if it would seem to serve your Fatherland, but you just ache to baby me like a big sister when it's just a matter of you and me. The Fatherland is like King Charles' head, which would insist on intruding itself into a very celebrated document originally devoted, I believe, to cabbages."

Bertha laughed and kissed the upturned cheek of the plucky girl very tenderly.

"I think I know 'David Copperfield' rather better than you do, dear. It wasn't cabbages; but I'm sure I can keep King Charles' head out of it until after you're out to bed, anyhow. I am sure you can trust me."

"I've probably got it mixed with 'Cabbages and Kings.' They have a similar tendency to get their heads cut off. At any rate, I'm sure you're quite lovely, Bertha, when you keep the Fatherland out of the document."

"It is written by a higher hand than mine, dear. Let's go and take a look at our interesting quarters. I am almost dead for sleep. Call me when we pass Sandy Hook, or in case of anything unusual, lieutenant."

Von Heimer saluted stiffly.

"And call me at the slightest sign of excitement, lieutenant," Marian begged.

Von Heimer saluted again, smiling.

"I should invent an excuse immediately but for my fear of Hadley, Miss Madcap," he ventured. "I fear you will find him a great tyrant as a husband."

Hadley smiled. Marian gave him a look of reproof.

"Having ordered me to bed, it might become you to try to get some sleep yourself—tyrant," she said. "You may first support me to my quarters. When my father releases me I shall tell him how you bullied me—and saved my life," she finished in a whisper, "from lunatics of Kultur."

CHAPTER XII.

To Circumvent the Hohenzollerns.

In spite of Nada's pleas, Von Heimer had steadily refused to take her aboard the submarine.

"I can protect Miss Nicholson," he said. "I shall take her aboard and carry her to the home of her friends, where she wishes to go. I know the men are loyal enough to me to do that, in spite of the princess. In fact, by taking her I can unite the men more strongly behind me if the princess tries to make trouble, as she will. But I couldn't possibly protect you. Whatever your motives, you have undoubtedly been doing things that Germans, at the present time, are in no mood to consider as patriotism.

"Her highness doesn't know you are on board this boat. You had better stay on it. I shall leave the engine running, so when we have gone you can head for the shore or wait to be picked up. If I take you aboard the submarine, now that the Fraulein's there, I am signing your death-warrant."

"I can persuade them," Nada pleaded. "It would be a wonderful thing to win over an entire submarine crew to the cause of liberty and sanity."

"You might as well try to convert the torpedoes. You will stay on board this boat, Nada."

She was peering through a window in the darkened cabin.

"Certainly!" she agreed readily and unexpectedly. "I see Bertha is going aboard the submarine alone. The men are putting back. Brunner is going to carry out the commission Schlatter resigned so suddenly. He is what I want."

"What do you want him for?"

"I want something that you have come three thousand miles to bring. If it's what I think it is, it's enough to carry the necessary amount of conviction I needed to a certain idealist."

"Nada, I'm afraid I'm neglecting my duty in not arresting you. I'm afraid you're a traitor to Germany."

She stamped her foot impatiently.

"Here is an excellent excuse for you," she snapped. "If you make a move toward me I'll kill you."

In her hand an automatic pistol covered Von Heimer's heart.

'I am not a traitor to Germany," she went on; "I am a rebel against frightfulness and against the insane insolence that dares to brand it upon a great nation's soul, while ordering it to endure torments of the body to preserve the rights of insolence to be insolent. If you think that's treason, try to arrest me."

"Auf wiedersehen, my Nada; God be with you."

"And with you, my Rupert! And with the Fatherland."

"And with the Fatherland."

"Auf wiedersehen! Take good care of my dear patient, Rupert! Good-by, dear Miss Nicholson."

"Good-by, dear Nada! You'll come to see me, soon, won't you?"

"What is it you say in America. You bet!"

"'You betcher!' is more common. "Good luck!"

'Good luck!"

MAINTAIN RIGHT IN DAMAGE SUIT

Massachusetts Surgeon Operated on Wrong Side of a Patient.

Boston, Mass., Jan. 2.—The Massachusetts Supreme Court today gave Edward B. Purchase, of Springfield, a tool foreman in the employ of the Boston and Albany Railway, the right to maintain a suit for $10,000 damages against Dr. Ralph H. Zellys, of that city, growing out of an alleged unauthorized surgical operation.

It appeared in evidence that Purchase was injured in the course of his duties. Dr. Zellys, the railway surgeon, was called in to operate, and mistaking Purchase for another patient, operated on the left side, when Purchase's injury was on the right side. Later a second operation was performed on the right side.

After Purchase returned to work he made a settlement with the road, signing a release which included the railway company, its officers, agents and servants. The lower court ruled that the release was a bar to Purchase's action against the doctor and the case was carried to the Supreme Court on exception.

The decision of the Supreme Court, sustaining Purchase, was as follows:

"We are of the opinion that the act of defendant in operating on the wrong side was a wholly wrongful, independent and intervening cause, for which the signal wrong-doer was in no way responsible."

U. S. TRANSPORT IN UGLY POSITION

New York, Jan. 2—The American transport Northern Pacific, ashore off Fire Island with three thousand troops, civilians and crew, was shifted slightly during the night by the waves and wind. at 8 a. m. today, with a rough sea running and a moderate southwest breeze blowing, the ship's bow had swung 150 feet shorewards. Hitherto the vessel had been lying broadside to the beach. The weather conditions at 8 o'clock were not considered favorable to the transfer of the troops.

FRENCH PLAN FOR A PROTECTORATE

Paris, Jan. 1—France plans to assume guidance of destinies of Armenia, Syria and Lebanon in conformity with treaties signed with great Britain and Russia in 1915, if the coming peace conference does not rule otherwise, according to information furnished Associated Press.

NO QUICK CURE.

Of course, the "healing peace" about which so many honeyed words are now being spoken and written, is the sort of peace everybody wants, but it is not to be had by the hasty process of sewing up the world's wounds and spreading salve on them. Wounds must be cleansed before being closed, and it is also well to make sure that all the surgical instruments, sponges, etc., have been removed before the sewing up is proceeded with. So far as practical observers can judge Germany needs considerable swabbing out before the bandages are put on. We imagine the congress of Versailles will attend to this very thoroughly despite the screams of the patient and the snuffles of the "healers."

FOR LEGALIZED BOXING.

[Chicago Tribune.]

The soldiers and sailors have made boxing moral. Why cannot the legislature make it legal? If it did the men in service good, physically and morally, why can it not do good to young men if they are not in service? If the army and navy can supervise boxing matches and keep them clean and free from objectionable features is that task beyond the ability of civil authorities? The army and navy boxers have knocked the moral turpitude out of the ring. They have won popular approval. Why not allow a healthy sport to develop in a decent fashion?

RUSSIAN PROBLEM AT THE CONFERENCE

The Powers Do Not Want to Act Without Knowing What the Results Will Be

(By special cable and leased wire to The Daily Gleaner.)

Paris, Jan. 3.—The Russian situation despite increasingly conflicting and disquieting news concerning encounters between the Boleshvikis and Allies, will not interfere with the regular course of the peace dilbrations unless conditions become much worse.

This will be the opinion expressed in the official circles here today. In case the situation does develop any alarming crisis it is believed the peace conference will be delayed until some kind of an understanding is reached regarding Russia.

At present there is no prospect that the Russian problem will be taken up at the start of the conference. It has been discussed but no decision has been reached.

The situation in Russia in the opinion of some American representatives can be compared to that in Mexico. The powers do not want to act without knowing what the results will be.

GERMANS MUST SALUTE ALLIES

Coblenz, Jan. 2.—(By the A. P.)—Beginning with the New Year, all German civil employees in uniform and all German soldiers within the American area of occupation must salute American officers. Failure to comply makes the Germans liable to arrest. An order to this effect reached Coblenz from American General Headquarters at Treves.

A GREATER PAGEANT.

[London Daily Chronicle.]

The handing over of the German navy on its surrender is being described as the greatest pageant in naval history. It may well be that, but could it compare with some that have been seen in the past in point of beauty? Probably not, and it may be hazarded that the most beautiful of all in the annals of the Navy was that witnessed by no less a person than Metternich on May 2, 1794, when from the summit of a hill behind Cowes he watched the Channel Fleet put to sea with the East Indies and West Indies convoys—more than 400 ships in all. "I consider this," he wrote, "the most beautiful sight I have ever seen. I might say, indeed, the most beautiful that human eyes have ever beheld."

OLD TIMBER IN NEW SHIPS.

[Boston Globe.]

According to the rings on the stumps of big oaks cut at Winnegance, Me., this season for shipbuilding, a number of the trees were from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five years old, and some had been growing for one hundred and fifty years. The Morse sawmill at Winnegance has been operated for more than one hundred years. The original frame of the mill is still there, as sound as ever, some of the hewn sticks of timber being eighty feet in length.

A POISONING CASE.

Chicago, Jan. 2—Detective Sergeant Edward Birmingham and Alphonse Brissette, steward of the University Club, started for Norfolk, Va., today to identify a man under arrest there and believed to be Jean Crones, wanted here on a charge of poisoning the soup at a banquet to Archbishop George W. Mundelein, nearly three years ago.

Poverty would soon be an unknown quantity if men could dispose of their experience at cost.

WEAK, RUN DOWN WOMAN

Tells How Vinol Made Her Strong

So. Kaukauna, Wis.—"I was weak, all run down, tired all the time, and had Asthma so I could hardly keep around and do my housework. After eevrything else had failed to help me, Vinol built me up and made me well and strong."—Mrs. Jay Parker.

The reason Vinol was so successful in Mrs. Parker's case, is because it contains the necessary elements to create an appetite, aid digestion, make pure blood and create strength. It is the beef and cod liver peptones—iron and glycerophosphates in Vinol—that does it—you will not be disappointed if you try it.
