SWEARS STEWART SAID THAT HE HAD SHOT ROSS

At the trial here Friday of Millet Stewart, charged with the murder of James Ross, Victoria Latullippe swore that the accused had told her that he had shot Ross.

A great deal of interest is being taken in this case, the court room being crowded day after day.

Among those who attend regularly are Stewart's wife and four children; also the widow of the murdered man and her small children. The crown has several more witnesses to call, including Fred and Joe Latullippe, and it is expected the case will be finished on Tuesday of next week.

At the morning session, John Savoy was subjected to a long and grueling cross-examination by Daniel Mullin, K. C., counsel for the prisoner, but his story was not changed materially.

Afternoon Session
At the afternoon session the crown called Victoria Latullippe. The witness testified she had worked as a domestic at the house of the accused at the time of the murder. On the morning of the murder she heard that her family was being put out of their property, and she went down and saw Ross there. She took a stick and hit Ross on the head twice with it. He shoved her away and carried her out of doors. Stewart was across the road and showed the witness a knife and wanted her to go to the house and drive them put. He picked up a stone and wanted her to hit them with it, which she refused to do.

She went back to the Stewart place and, after supper, the accused wanted her to come on down to the shore. "We will go and put Ross out of the house," he had said. The witness could not go at first, but later said that she would. She started for Ross's place with Stewart and John Savoy, driving in the wagon. Stewart had a gun. They met the witness's brothers, Fred and Joe, on the road and Stewart asked them to go down and help put Ross out. The Latullippe boys did not want to go and said they would not go down if there was going to be any shooting. Stewart said there would be no shooting done. They went down and, before they got to Ross's gate, the accused gave the witness a long bar of iron and wanted her to break into Ross's house, saying he would follow behind. She refused to do this. Stewart then got out of the wagon about fifty yards before reaching Ross' gate, while the others stayed in the wagon and drove on down the road.

When they got to the turn in the road the witness heard two shots, and about five minutes afterwards Stewart came up to the wagon and put the gun in the wagon and got in and said: "I shot him". The witness said: "For G— sake, what did you say?" The accused said "Yes I got him". The witness said: "Did you see him?" Stewart said "Yes he was standing by the gate and I fired at him, and I saw him fall." All the way home Stewart kept saying to witness: "Save my life, save my life and don't tell on me." That night the accused came to the witness door after she was in bed and said: "Do you think I killed him." The witness said: "I don't know; go to your bed". At the inquest next day, the accused had said to the witness: "What are you going to say this morning?" She said, "I am going to tell the truth; I am going to tell what I know." Stewart said "By G—, if you do you will get all that is coming to you." He then said he was going to swear he had no rifle. The witness said: "If you do it will be a false oath, because you know you did." Stewart said, "I don't give a D— for a false oath."
