SNOW.

Not in the city, in the crowded street, Not 'mong the haunts of men, Where the ceaseless tramp of countless

Would caush thee out again, Fall thou, fair snow.

Not on our grany roofs and miry ways, Where soot flakes rest and cling; Not through the vapourous fog, whose murky haze

Would smirch a cherub's wing, Fall thou, pure snow.

Out on the mountain, on the upland moor Over the fertile vale, O'er park and woodland, hall, and cotiage poor, Shake out thy pilions pale, Angel of snow.

Where country children greet the with a And carches thee in their play, The fur-clac darling, and the ragged loub, Rejoicing on their way. Fall thou, fair snow.

Spread the white mantie out o'er mother

Keep warm her naked breast; Broad fields will thank thee with prolific

And man through thee be blest, Thou guardia , snow.

Give to the wintry woods a crown And from the spreading plain Look at the sky with pure, unsuffed face,

Where is no fear of tam,

Thou spotiess snow.

But far from the loud c'ty's crowded way Wing thy unwhispering flight; Liammon his no delight In fallling snow.

Hush! the s ft snow is drifting to the ground In eloquent re'mke! I seem to hear a sermon without so

Where falls the anow, Yes! in the city, in the crow ed street Among the haunts of men Thou h the rough tamp of countless
