Death of Archbishop Lamy.

13th February that Archbishop Lamy, of Santa Fe, died at 7.45 on the morning of that day. He had been ill, but the last bulletins had been ill, but the last bulletins had represented him as convalescing. Our correspondent in New Mexico only one day before assured us that the venerable prelate was out of danger. A sudden relapse of the dreaded pneumonia took him off.

delivered by Rev. Dr. Healy, before a Sligo audience:

About four weeks ago Archbishop Lamy was taken ill at his farm, a short distance from this city. As soon as possible he was removed to the arch-Episcopal residence, adjacent to the cathedral, where he was attended by eminent physicians and waited upon by countless, numbers of friends, all of whom were untiling in ministering to his wants. His disease being a second attack of pneumonia, he was very weak and could take but little nourishment, but after the fatal ninth day had passed he began to rally and seemed to improve. Great hopes were then entertained that he would recover. His age, however, was so advanced and his constitution so shattered by constant work, that it failed to withstand so severe a trial, and death came slowly, but surely, until he breathed his last at eight o'clock this morning. The chimes in the cathedral, in the many churches, the convents, colleges, hospital and other religious institute.

nati, having visited France in search of priests for his extensive diocese, selected Father Lamy to assist him in the missionary work in the West. He worked zealously for eight years in the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, when he went to Kentucky, where he spent years on a mission, in each case being the centre of the mingstrange port the wondrous dome.

It takes a long time to realize the little to the gaspet side, that the northern princes, the latest hope of Ireland's ancient royal race:

There is the wealth of decoration—and yet nothing 36 years old, he was selected by the holy see to take special charge of New Mexico as its first vicar-apostolic, and he received Episcopal consecration at the hands of Archbishop Parcell, November 24, 1850, and proceeted at once to the western wilds of Mexico and New Mexico, where he began the establishment of a mission which will make was possible as a work of human serior of a mission which will make was beingted for firm's weal, And died for Erin's weal.

What a confirmation of Cardinal Wiseman's famous dictum that the history of England as written since the Reformation is a conspiracy against truth!

Now we have the source of all the stories against the religious houses in England in the statement sent by a return of the continent. It was creeted by those with the property of the Christian Brothers. On the rough beams that support the gallery is carved in Spanish the following subscription: "El Sr. Margues de la Peinael a hizo esta fibrica el la ferez real Dom.
