

I'm the Cream of the West Miller, and I'll tell you what I'll do—I'll guarantee your next batch of bread

I WILL guarantee it to rise away up out of the pans, and make as delicious bread as you ever tasted. The loaves will be the biggest and most wholesome you ever baked with the same amount of flour. I'll guarantee it or you get back the money you paid for the flour! Now see: Go to your grocer and buy a barrel of Cream of the West Flour. Take it home and bake it up. Give it a trial. Your oven or yeast might not be just right the first time. Now when you give it a fair trial, if you honestly feel that you have not had splendid satisfaction with Cream of the West Flour, return the unused portion of barrel and get your money back. Just tell the store man your bread didn't come out right and you want your money back as guaranteed. It's not the grocer man who loses. It doesn't come out of his pocket. It is the Campbell Milling Company, Limited, of Toronto, who pay, and they are satisfied to pay if you'll be satisfied to try Cream of the West Flour. Ask your store-keeper about this guarantee. He knows. He will tell you. Try a barrel.

A MYSTERIOUS QUEST.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Welcome and Unwelcome Intruders

"Have any of those canvases and things been moved?" he inquired.

"No."

"Yet a man has passed amid them freely. Ah!"

The exclamation was caused by the sudden discovery of a small and glittering object lying on the floor under the lounge. Drawing it out, he showed it to the artist with a quiet and peculiar smile.

"A detective's badge," he cried.

"The identity of your visitor is explained. He was no one else than my colleague."

The artist, with his eyes flashing from the empty decanter to the still moist ashes, changed color.

"You are right," said he, "and by his visit he has probably saved my life."

A bottle of prevention is better than a deranged stomach.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt

25c and 60c bottle. Sold everywhere.

"What's that?"

"He warned me. He told me that I was in danger from this adventure's jealousy, and—"

"Wait! What adventurer?"

"The other Degraw. You knew there's another man here who calls himself 'Hamilton Degraw,' did you not?"

"Yes."

"Well, he passes for a gentleman. He is perhaps a gentleman, but, for all that, he is the villain you are seeking; He came with recommendations from Cleveland, and was received into Miss Aspinwall's house, and immediately began to make love to Signorina Valdi, whose real name, as you doubtless know, is Jenny Rogers. He has dark hair, gray eyes and a persuasive manner. He has been in New York, and if not the gentleman you seek, certainly answers to all descriptions of him as fully as I ever did."

"Very good, I will see him."

"Your man—that is, the detective you sent here—is not in favor of his immediate arrest. He wishes to wait till this mysterious Degraw commits himself. But I, who have so much at stake, feel this to be cold-blooded. I hope you will agree with me."

"We will see; we will see."

"And what is more curious still, he, as well as she, declares that it is my life which is menaced, and not hers. Though, to be sure, her fears are the offspring of his, he having seen fit to tell her of certain mutterings uttered by Degraw, which he, in his character of valet to that gentleman, had been fortunate enough to overhear."

Mr. Gryce, who had been studiously considering the head of his cane, shifted his gaze, at this point, to the ferule.

"Please repeat that," said he.

"The other did so."

"I begin to be interested," muttered the detective to the impassive object he was considering. Then, in his usual colloquial manner, he observed: "So that fellow of ours has been playing the part of this gentleman's valet?"

"Yes."

"And has talked with Miss Rogers?"

"Yes."

"And with you?"

"Yes."

"Humph! And yet you speak of him in a careless way as my man?"

"I do not know him by name."

"You do not know him by name?"

"No."

"He must be wonderfully disguised."

"How?"

"The man whom we sent here was Mr. Byrd."

"Never!"

"Mr. Byrd," emphatically repeated the detective.

"It is impossible! No disguise could make blue eyes black. This fellow has black eyes."

"Pooh!"

"Black, I assure you."

"Lights deceive."

"I have seen him by daylight only."

"It is Byrd; I have his letter here, written in his own hand."

The artist grew excited.

"Letter or no letter, black eyes or blue, the man who calls himself Mr. Degraw's valet and an officer of your force is not Mr. Byrd."

The detective gave a sly wink at the ferule, as if it were with that and not with the artist he had been carrying on this dispute, then buried it with the secrets he had been imparting to it, deep in the pile of the rug upon which he stood, and turned toward the door.

"Let us make a few inquiries," he proposed.

The artist, unused to this sort of work, followed his steps with reluctance.

"Whither are we going?" he asked.

"First, to your landlady or landlender or whoever it is who keeps this house going. I want to find out if any one saw a person enter here since you have been out, and if so, who it was."

"Then let us ask the old man who sits on the front porch. He is always there and would be sure to see any one who came in by the door."

"Very good."

So they asked the old man who was still sitting in his favorite spot, though the night dews were falling, and cosy-looking lights welcomed him within.

He answered that he had seen two strange men admitted, besides the elderly gentleman now addressing him. One came quickly, passed him rudely, and went in without waiting for his hurried ring at the door to be answered. He had a book in his hand. The other came immediately after him, stepped quietly by his chair, and did not stop to ring at all. Both went toward Degraw's room.

"Two?"

The artist looked amazed. The detective turned up his ferule and nodded at it.

"And when did these men come out?"

"Why, they have not come," the old man answered. "I have sat here on purpose to watch, but I was going to see them their business when I saw them again."

"A fine watch-dog, that," murmured Mr. Gryce, sarcastically. Then with a kindly bow: "They were both young men, I take it?"

"Oh, yes, young fellows, not Mr. Degraw's kind, but well enough."

"I see; I see. Come, Mr. Degraw, our business takes us further." And Mr. Gryce descended the two steps leading to the walk while saying: "Your window points towards the west, I see. Probably the latter man followed the first out of it into the skirting of trees that leads up the hill-side. We will let them take care of themselves. We have other matters on hand just now."
