THE HEIR OF Lancewood

CHAPTER XXX.

Then there's a relay of visitors from Paris of the same stamp as the last. I saw Sir Harry Lane yesterday, and he said he did not know what Lancewood was coming to.

"Lancewood shall come to no harm," said the girl with flashing eyes. "And you have not joined the crowd, Mr. Dorman?"

"No," he replied. "And Holmes, the butler, has offended Lady Neslie. He told her that he was accustomed to wait upon ladies and gentlemen. Her ladyship would have sent him away at once, but Monsieur de Nouchet said no one else understood the wines."

A rustle of silk was heard, a subtle perfume seemed to float through the room. Looking round, Vivien saw Lady Neslie watching her with a mocking smile.

"How do you do, Vivien?" she asked. "I had quite forgotten that you intended returning to-day. You find us in the midst of a very brilliant fête."

"I see a number of strange people here, Lady Neslie," she observed.

"Yes," was the careless rejoinder. "When we cannot have what we want, we must be content with what we can get," says a very sensible rendering of our French proverb. I hardly fancied you would return, Vivien. Did you not find an admirer amongst Lady Smeaton's friends?"

Miss Neslie's face flushed indignantly. "You forget yourself, Lady Neslie," she said coldly.

"No, my dear, I never do that," laughed miladi. "But I fancied that I had heard of something of the kind. You will join our visitors, Vivien?"

"I think not. I do not know any of them, Lady Neslie."

"They are very amusing—much more so than your stiff countesses. For my part, I hold the English aristocracy in abhorrence."

"And they return the compliment," said Vivien. But miladi went back laughing to her guests.

CHAPTER XXXI.

It was a long day for Vivien—the time hung very heavy. She wandered through the deserted rooms; she looked up at the noble faces of the dead Neslies on the walls; she thought of the man whom she had learned to love. She looked long at her mother's picture. The slow, cruel, sunny hours lingered. She could

Don't Hawk, Spit, Sneeze, Cure Yourself! Breathe "Catarrhazone."

GIVES INSTANT RELIEF, CLEARS OUT NOSE, THROAT AND ALL BREATHING ORGANS.

In this fickle climate, repeated colds very easily drift into Catarrh. The natural tendency of Catarrh is to extend through the system in every direction.

Exposure to cold or dampness intensifies the trouble and nasal catarrh is the result.

Unless a complete cure is effected, inflammation passes rapidly to the throat, bronchial tubes and then to the lungs.

You can't make new lungs—hence Consumption is practically incurable. But Catarrh can be cured, except in its final and always fatal stage.

Catarrh sufferers, meaning those with colds, sore throat, bronchial trouble, etc., can all be cured right at home by inhaling "Catarrhazone."

In using Catarrhazone you don't take medicine into the stomach—you just breathe a healing piney vapor direct to the lungs and air passages.

The purest balsams and the greatest antiseptics are thus sent to every spot where catarrhal trouble exists, germs are killed, foul secretions are destroyed, nature is given a chance and cure comes quickly.

Colds and throat troubles can't last if the pure healing vapor of Catarrhazone is breathed, sneezing and coughing cease at once, because irritation is removed.

Use Catarrhazone to prevent—use it to cure your winter ills. It's pleasant safe and guaranteed in every case. Complete outfit $1.00. Smaller size, 50c, at all dealers.

When it's so easy to bring back the bloom of youth to faded cheeks, when skin disfigurements can be removed, isn't it foolish to plaster on cosmetics? How much happier you'll feel—pimples gone, cheeks rosy again, eyes bright, spirits good, joyous health again returned. Never a failure with Dr. Hamilton's Pills, get a 25c. box to-day.

how hard it seemed—wondering if circumstances would ever take such a turn as in some degree to free her. At present to leave Lancewood would simply be to place it in the hands of the enemy.

She was thinking so deeply and so intently that she had not noticed the rush of the people toward that part of the grounds where the fireworks were to be seen; she had not heard the loud explosions. She had not noticed the dying away of the day and the gleaming of the golden stars. She was wrapped in a dream. She would have sat there for hours, but that a sudden sound near her startled her. Looking round, she saw that miladi had entered the drawing-room with the tutor.

He had lighted one of the lamps, and a soft pearly glow filled the room; by it Vivien saw Lady Neslie. She wore a dress of white and gold brocade, with jewels shining in her hair, on her breast, and round her arms. The lovely, laughing face was flushed, a mocking smile curled the rich, red lips, a defiant light shone in the large, bright eyes, a long tress of hair, unfastened, had fallen on to her white shoulder. As Vivien looked at her she thought of a picture of a Bacchante which she had seen in a Paris gallery—a Bacchante with just such another lovely, laughing, defiant, flushed face. Vivien would have spoken, but the first words uttered arrested her attention and seemed to strike her dumb.

It was her ladyship who spoke first, and the conversation was carried on in French. She held a jeweled fan in her hand, and waved it lightly as she spoke.

"Now, Henri, quick! Why have you brought me away from my guests? What do you want to say to me?"

"I want your answer to my question, Valerie, and I am determined to have it. You duped me years ago; you shall not, I swear, dupe me again."

"You rather enjoy the duping," she returned, carelessly.

"I have been here now—how many months? I find it dull, this old Abbey of yours. I am tired of it. I long to be at Baden or Monaco, Hamburg, Paris, anywhere where there is a semblance of life. I want your answer at once."

"And why, pray, do you want it in this hurried fashion?"

"You call it hurried, when I have been waiting for months! I will have it to-night, for the reason that De Calloux returns to Paris to-morrow, and my affairs must be arranged."

"What if I do not choose to give you this promise, monsieur?"

"His face grew livid with rage.

"Then," he replied, "I swear that I will betray you to the proud daughter of this house. All England shall know who my Lady Neslie is."

Vivien had recovered herself. She pushed aside the roses and the passion flowers all damp with dew. She stepped from the balcony into the room.

"Let me warn you," she said in French. "I have no wish to listen to your conversation. Permit me to pass through the room."

But Henri de Nouchet interposed. "I am glad you are here, Miss Neslie. I make my appeal to you—you are proud and cold and hard, but you are just and honorable."

Miladi laughed mockingly.

"This promises to be interesting," she said; and the Frenchman's dark face grew darker as he heard the mocking tones.

"I appeal to you," he said passionately, "to see justice done to me. This lady promised most faithfully, when I met her in Paris, to marry me, and now she refuses to keep her word."

"That I do, most decidedly," put in Valerie, with a smile.

"Is it fair to me, Miss Neslie? Is it just—is it honorable? She promised. We arranged it all. I was to come to Lancewood on some pretext or other, to seem to fall in love with her, and we were to be married. I should have come in the guise of a traveling artist, but that she proposed my coming as a tutor. Is it fair or just that she should refuse me now?"

"I beg of you not to appeal to me in the matter. I can have nothing to say," replied Vivien.

"Most wisely answered," sneered miladi.

"We were engaged to be married," went on Monsieur de Nouchet, undeterred, "when Lady Neslie was only seventeen. When she broke off with me to marry your father, she promised faithfully that if she was left a widow—above all, a wealthy one—she would marry me. I met her in Paris; she renewed the promise, and now refuses to fulfill it. Is that just, Miss Neslie?"

Vivien turned away with an air of proud contempt.

"It does not interest me," she said, coldly.

"Pray, listen," he continued, vehemently. "You are the only one here possessed of truth and honesty. Is it honest of miladi to deceive me again?"

Lady Neslie laughed, while the light quivered in her jewels.

"It is all wasted pathos, Henri," she said; "Miss Neslie does not like you."

"I know it, but Miss Neslie will see justice done to me," he cried.

"My dear Henri," said Lady Valerie, "I was a foolish young girl when I first fell in love with your handsome face—and a very handsome face it was in those days."

He muttered something between his closed lips; miladi fanned herself languidly.

"I repeat that I was a foolish young girl. I was in love with you—I promised to marry you. All that I admit. But Sir Arthur came in my way. What girl of sense would have hesitated between a handsome, penniless lieutenant and a rich English baronet? Love—bah! It pales before money. You owned yourself that I was doing a most sensible thing when I married him."

The Frenchman's face grew paler as he listened to the light mocking voice.

"Then I met you again in Paris, when I had been some little time a widow, and I renewed my promise to marry you. That was rash, I knew it. I determined that I would see what you were like before I married you. I have tested you, and you have failed. I thought the wisest thing that I could do would be to invite you over to Lancewood. But this is such a curious country. I decided it is better that you should come in some business capacity. I have watched you closely since you have been here, and now I decline the alliance—I will not marry you."

"You forget," he hissed, "that you are in my power."

"I am indifferent. I will not be hard. I will give you a very handsome present, and you shall return to fair France; but I shall not accompany you, monsieur."

"Will you at least tell me why?" he asked, with a curious whiteness coming over his face.

"Yes, I have not the least objection," replied Lady Neslie. "You were young when I first knew you. You had no decided faults. Now you are a confirmed gambler. You could no more keep from the gambling-table than you could live without air. That is why I decline to marry you, Henri de Nouchet."

"If I give my word," he began; but miladi interrupted him.

"There are marvels in nature," she said, "but that such a marvel as your giving up gambling could ever take place, I refuse to believe. Years ago," she continued earnestly, "I should not have thought so much of this, but I have learned the value of money. I know the value of a good home, a substantial fortune, and I shall not forfeit these things for you."

LONDON, Aug. 18. (Official.) General French reports that there have been no incidents of importance on the British line in Belgium since France since his last communication of the 10th inst., when the recapture of positions at Hooze had been consolidated. On the remainder of the front there has been intermittent artillery engagements of importance.

GERMAN MENACE AND THE STATES.

DETROIT, Aug. 18. George Gordon Moore, a Detroit capitalist, an international financier, the European war, through his friendship for Sir John French, and the only American who has been in a favored position in France, sounded a remarkable note of warning last night against what he called "the German menace." In an address before the annual convention of veterans of foreign wars, his address which was punctuated by hearty applause. An invisible army of 500,000 men Reservists 500,000 strong, sworn to be loyal to the Kaiser was conjured up by Mr. Moore as a prime factor in his self-styled message. Germany, he said, is being manufactured for her in the United States more war munitions than is the United States itself, he told the veterans. He mentioned that German knowledge of technical achievements, cunning and diplomatic porary life that was difficult to estimate just how far prepared the United States is for war at the present time. Mr. Moore drew an alarming picture of conditions in the United States, should this country be involved in strained relations with any foreign power. He mentioned Germany as the most likely opponent of this country in that event.

GERMAN ACTIVITIES IN THE STATES.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18. The Herald this morning gives prominence to a summary of German secret activities in the United States. It follows: Germany has raised $20,000,000 in this country since March, 1914, has used the money in an attempt to involve the United States in the war. Germany's expenses in maintaining offices in America from which its anti-British propaganda is directed are estimated at about $200,000 a week. The shake-up in the German secret service in this country is expected as a result of the publication of correspondence of German agents and sympathizers. The Providence Journal says that Germany, operating through Otto Kuhn Loeb & Co., is hoping to compel purchase by the United States of German merchant vessels now in New York Harbor. Mr. Loeb has laid before Washington official evidence that the German Government tried through the Kuhn Loeb Company to obtain control of the St. Louis Wireless Station, and attempts to obtain the secret of the fire control system aboard American warships. The New York World presents documents in evidence to prove that German trade expert, while making Frank appeals to Washington to open the way for German imports through the British blockade, secretly advised his government to discourage shipments. Washington officials declare that citizens will be prosecuted under the Federal statute for intruding in favor of the German government.
