

A Clear, Beautiful Skin

There are millions of tiny openings or pores in the skin and these must be kept open and clean if the beauty of the skin is to be maintained.

Because it cleanses these pores and encourages the healthful action of the skin, Dr. Chase's Ointment is most effective as a skin beautifier. Roughness, redness, pimples and all sorts of skin blemishes disappear by its use, and the skin is left clear, smooth and velvety.

Mr. Smith Touches on Manifestos.

WHOLLY CONCERNING PROHIBITION.

The Evening Telegram has been prepared for the general public. It seems to me only right that the makers thereof, what they intend to do about the laws relating to the sale of alcoholic beverages. The public, I believe, will not be satisfied with mere generalities. Some time ago the suggestion was made in Prohibitionist circles that candidates for the House of Assembly should be asked to vote for Prohibition. No one would object to that if it were known to all the electors who are asked and who are not. The electors would then know how to vote. It is more than fair that the electors should have definite promises in the candidates' manifestos exactly what they propose to do. The public, I feel sure, like to see answers to the following questions:—
(1) Do you propose to make any change in the principle of the Prohibition Law? If not, will you make any changes in its administration? If so, what?
(2) Do you propose that the people shall be given an opportunity to decide upon the question as to whether we shall have Prohibition or not?
(3) If a plebiscite be the means whereby the question shall be decided, when will that plebiscite take place? I mean, what is considered to be the earliest and what the latest date?
(4) If a plebiscite is granted, are the women to have a vote on the subject?

(5) If you consider that the people can decide without a plebiscite, how do you propose to ascertain their wishes and how is the Legislature to be sure of their attitude on the subject?
(6) If it is not intended by your party to make any change in the principle of Prohibition, do you intend in any case to make any reduction in the cost of medicine containing alcohol, or in the form commonly referred to as alcoholic beverages? What do you intend to do to reduce the cost of scripts, etc., the heavy cost of the Controller's Department and the high duties levied on these medicines whereby the cost of all of them has been increased out of all proportion—that of rum, for instance, costing in many cases fifty times the original cost in the West Indies?
(7) Do you propose taking any steps to stop the waste going on in the Controller's Department, and to see that proper methods are followed of keeping check upon the stock and upon the strengths of the various liquors handled by that Department?
(8) If you consider that this is in no way a party question, do you promise that the free non-partisan vote of members of the Legislature, either with or without a plebiscite, and that party meetings shall not first decide "that no member of the party shall introduce any legislation whatsoever affecting the matter," nor that "if any of the other party should introduce such legislation your party will immediately vote it down?"
If the makers of manifestos will give plain answers to these plain questions, then the fifteen thousand electors, whose petitions were forwarded to me and my Committee for presentation to the Legislature, will know how to act.

Yours truly,
WARWICK SMITH.

ENVOY MILLER ADDRESSES GATHERING.

A service of a very impressive and enthusiastic nature was conducted in the No. 1 Citadel, New Gower Street, at seven o'clock on Sunday evening, by Commandant P. Sainsbury, the officer in charge of the Corps.

After the opening song and prayer the Commandant referred feelingly to the loss sustained by the family of Brother Rich, in the drowning of his son-in-law, the late Charles Vatcher, which took place on Saturday outside the Narrows. The eyes of many present were dim with tears as the voice, husky with emotion, prayed that the presence of Him who is acquainted with all our sorrows might be with the bereaved family in their hour of trial.

Envoy J. Miller, who spent the past ten weeks in New York and other American cities, on business, was given a hearty welcome home and in a rousing ten minute address gave a very graphic account of the various phases of army activities as he saw them in the land of the Stars and Stripes. It was his privilege, he said, to attend a great convention led by Commander Booth, in the city of Boston, and the crowds of uniformed Salvationists and the enthusiasm displayed was an inspiration to him. He was in a position to assure his comrades that the Salvation Army in the United States was going strong and he urged those present to make the word of God the guiding principle of their lives.

The Last Native Indian in Newfoundland.

The records of our colonies are full of interest, and especially in Newfoundland, "England's Oldest Colony." The scene of many a desperate conflict when England and France fought for the supremacy of the West, volumes could be filled with thrilling stories. The Indians never seem to have taken such a large place in the colony's history as they did in Canada and America, for although treacherous, they did not seek conflict, nor strive to drive the new settlers out of the country, and so the history of the colony does not abound with stories of bloodshed in connection with them. The last one of whom any reliable account was given, was a woman caught by a Mr. Peyton, an intrepid traveller and explorer of Newfoundland in the early part of the 19th century. This gentleman while travelling inland from the Eastern Coast came in sight of a small party of natives, and caught one woman, who came into intercourse with the others, so he returned to St. John's, bringing her with him. As it was on March 3rd, and the Government desired to conciliate the remnant of the natives, she was baptised in the name of Mary March, well cared for, and every means taken to make her a messenger of peace to her tribe; but all efforts were in vain. She persistently refused to return to them, giving her new friends to understand, as well as she could, that, having been living with the white people, her own people would kill her if she returned to them. Many efforts were made to trace them, but none were ever seen after that memorable day. Remains of their campments were found, relics from their burial grounds are in the local museum; but Mary March was the last living native ever seen by the colonists. Surrounded by friends who cared for her, she died of Consumption on January 8th, 1820, after ten months' experience of the white people's kindness.

First Telephone Between London and Paris.

The late Right Hon. H. C. Raikes, when Postmaster-General, sent, the first public message ever transmitted through the telephone, between London and Paris, on March 18th, 1891. In accordance with custom, the first words spoken from the English side were the following: "And the Lord said, My voice shall traverse continents, islands, and seas. Thus have I promised to Eve in the Garden of Eden, that a Messiah should come to relieve the world and of the long years that elapsed and the many generations which came and went before this promise was fulfilled. Many scoffed and said He would not come at all, but He came and His ministry produced wonderful results. Then, when His mission was finished for the time being, He went back to the promise that He would come again, and we find the Disciples preaching the second coming of Christ just as zealously as the Prophets preached the first.

The advent of Christ in the Manger, His wonderful ministry and final death and resurrection loses their reality for us, if we neglect to keep to the front in our teaching and preaching the fact that He will come again. He thought if men and women to-day would go about their duties and pleasures with the thought firmly planted in their minds that the second coming of Christ might be heralded at any moment, there would be much less sin and wrongdoing in the world than there is at the present time. The above is but a brief outline of this address which was delivered in a very earnest manner, and made a deep impression upon those present. A prayer meeting was held after the regular service when four persons sought and found pardon for their sins.

New Flying Craft.

PARIS. (Can. Press).—A report from Madrid says that a new model of flying craft has come into being there, being a cross between an aeroplane and a helicopter, with which it is claimed, the problem of vertical landing will be solved. In the course of the trials which have taken place it is stated that the machine left the ground fifty metres from its starting point, covered 200 metres at a height of from seven to eight metres and landed gently and almost vertically. The new craft is a monoplane with very small wings which might almost be called stabilisers and has an 80-horse-power engine.

Sick of Squoakerism

SOUTH WEST COAST WANTS A CHANGE.

ST. LAWRENCE, March 20. Special to Evening Telegram.

The whole South West Coast is sick of Squires and starvation. Many of our prime fishermen have returned, others are returning after a winter's work from the scene of Coaker's industrial enterprise—the lumber woods—without one cent in their pockets, humiliated by being made travel on a Government pass and forced to advertise their awful predicament to all the relieving officers along the line in order to keep the pangs of hunger ward off. From their hearts they are crying "Out of the Depths" and we home fervently re-echo their prayer. This is a sample of the remuneration which will be meted out to the ten thousand labourers of Coaker's promised industrial enterprises, but his chance to treat us so will never come again. Foote and Cheeseman are adding insult to injury by again approaching us for re-election. They are crying to the "Advocate" alleged to be from St. Lawrence and Lamaline about an 80% vote for these fellows are as great a fakes as the Industrial enterprises above mentioned. 'Tis a gross insult to the intelligent voters of Burin district to accuse them of such lack of sense. Bennett's proposed encouragement of prosecution of fisheries meets with our approval. G. C. Harris and colleagues will sweep into political oblivion—Foote and Cheeseman—the men who misrepresented us so grossly in the House of Assembly and allowed our rights and liberties to be trampled upon to such an extent as the records of the past three years show. We are fishermen not lumberjacks, therefore the hope of being allowed to fish and live independently is strange within us. With Bennett to the wheel and a good sprinkling of men of the type of G. C. Harris on the deck of the good old Banker Newfoundland she'll soon have sea-room and in the matter of fishing supplies "Roll away, boys" will take the place of a Government paper scrip for a barrel of flour. So let the slogan from Cape Race to Cape Ray be "Bennett and Roll Away Boys."—FISHERMAN.

Still Desire Regulations.

SINISTER DESIGNS OF SQUIRES AND COAKER.

In a special message to the Advocate of date November 24th, 1922, announcing the opening of the annual F.P.U. Convention at Port Union a reference was made to the Fish Regulations which should not be overlooked. The message, after describing the decorations for the occasion, says bunting was profusely utilized by shipping and the Union premises was splendidly attired. Electric mottoes adorned the buildings with inscriptions such as "We will win because we stand for compulsory control of codfish exports." It is also well to remember that the Prime Minister stated in the House of Assembly at the time the regulations were lifted that he was still a believer in them. The Advocate of Nov. 14th, 1922 in an article dealing with a system of marketing fish says: "Mr. Coaker intends to make it an issue and if the voters say to Mr. Coaker we back your system for marketing of fish he will have a mandate from the people." From the foregoing it is clear that Fish Regulations of some sort is still on the political horizon. Seeing how much ruin was caused by Mr. Coaker's first plunge, he should be given no second chance.
