Menwhile, Grace had time to think over all that happened, and to arrive at certain conclusions. She was at bottom a good girl, though liable to be led away by her imagination, her vanity, and her temperament. Don Miguel's best qualities had revealed themselves to her in the desert; he had always thought of her before himself, and done all that in him lay to save her from fatigue and sulfering, and had stuck to her faithfully when he might perhaps have increased his own chances of escape by abandoning her. Did not such a man deserve to be rewarded?—especially of quite a respectable income. Moreover, Harvey Freeman was now beyond her reach; he was going to marry Miram, and she had realized that her own brief infatuation for him had had no very deep root after all. Accordingly, she smiled encouragingly upon Don Miguel, and before they set out on their homeward ide she had vouchsafed him the bits of knowing that he might call her his. The general, as her guardian, did not withold his approval; but when Grace drew him aside and besought him never to reveal to her intended the fact that she had once been a shop-girl, the old warrior smiled. "You can depend upon me to keep your secret, if you wish it, my dear," said he, but I warn you that such concealments between husband and wife are not wise. He loves you, and would only love you the more for your frankness in confessing what you seem to consider a discreditable episoder though for my part I am free to tell you that you will be lucky if your future life affords you the opportunity of doing anything else so much to your credit. But the chances are that he will find it out sooner or later: and that may not be so agreeable, either to himor to you. Better tell him all now."

later: and that may not be so agreeable, either to himor to you. Better tell him all now."

For, after they were married, Don Miguel decided to visit the Atlantic coast on the wedding journey; and one of the first notable places they reached was, of course, New York. Don Miguel was delighted, and was never weary of strolling up Fifth Avenue and down Broadway, between Twenty-Third Street and Union Square, and were crossing one of the side-streets, a horse belonging to one of Lord Taylor's deliverywagons became frightened, and botted round the corner. One of the hind wheels of the vehicle came in contact with Grace's shoulder and knocked her down. The blow and the fall stunned her. Don Miguel's grief and indignation were expressed with tropical energy; and a bystander said, "Better carry her into the store, mister; it's heir wagon run her down, and they can't do ess than look after her."

The counsel seemed reasonable, and Don Miguel, with the as-instance of a policeman, lifted his wife and bore her into the stately shop. One of the floor-walkers met them at the door; he cast 'quance at their burden,' and exclaimed, 'Why, it's Miss Parsioe!' And immediate a number of the employes gathered round, a regarding her with interest and sympathy, all anxious to help, and—which was what mystified Don Miguel, as if to ask what was his business with the beautiful unconscious one!

glanced at Don Miguel, as if to ask what was his business with the beautiful unconscious one!

We "This lady are my wife," he said, with dignity. "She not any more Miss Parsloe."

"Oh, Grace has got married!" exclaimed the young ladies, one to another; and then an elderly man, evidently in authority, came forward and said, "I suppose you are aware, sir, that Miss Parsloe was formerly one of our girls here; and a very clover and useful girl she was. I need not say how sorry we are for this accident; I have sent for the physicani but I cannot but be glad that the mistortune has at least given me tho opportunity of telling you how highly your wife was valued and respected here."

At this juncture, Grace opened her eyes; she looked from one face to another, and knew that fate had brought the truth to light. But the physical shock tempered the severity of the mental one; besides, she could not help being pleased at the sight of so many well-remembered and friendly faces; and, finally, her husband did not look by any means so angry and scandalized as she had feared he would. Indeed he appeared almost gratified. The truth probably was, he was flatered to see his wife the center of so much interest and attention, and at the discovery that she had been in some way an honered appandage of se imposing an establishment. So, by the time Grace was well enough to be driven back to her hotel, the senor was prattling cheerfully and familiarly with all and sundry, and was promising to bring his wife back there the next day, to talk over old times with her former associates.

Such was Grace's punishment; it was not very severe; but then her fault had been a venial one; and the episode was of much moral benefit to her. She liked her husband all the better for having nothing more to conceal from him; her vanity was rebuked, and her false pride chastened; and when, in after years, her pretty daughters and black-haired sons gathered about her knees, she was wont to warn them sagely against he un-American absurdity of fearing to work for their living, or being ashamed to have it known.

un-American absurdity of fearing to work for their living, or being ashamed to have it known.

But the married life of Miriam and Harvey Freeman was characteristically American in its happiness. The representatives of the oldest and of the latest inhabitants of this continent, their union seemed to produce the flower of what was best in both. Their wedding is still remembered in that region, as being everything that a Southern Californian wedding should be: and the bride as she stood at the altar, looked what take was—one of those women who, more than anything else in this world, are fitted to bring back to earth the gentle splendors of the Garden of Eden. In her dark eyes, as she fixed them upon Freeman, there was a mystic light, telling of fathomiess depths of tenderness and intelligence; it seemed to her husband that love had expanded and uplifted her: or perhaps that other spirit in her, which had battled with her own, and had become reconciled, and therefore yielded up whatever it had of good and noble to aggrandize the gentle victory of its conqueror. Somehow, somewhere, in Miriam's nature, Semitz n lived; and, as a symbol of the peace and atonement that were the issue of her strange interior story, her husband preserves with reverence and affection the mysterious garment called the Golden Fleece.

A Pleasant Herb Drints.
The best cuire we know of for Constipation and Headache is the pleasant herb drink called Lane's Family Medicine. It is said to be Oregon grape root, combined with simple herbs and is made for use by pouring boiling water onto the dried roots and herbs. It is remarkably efficacious in all blood disorders, and is now the sovereign remedy with ladies for clearing up the complexion. Druggists sell the packages at 50c and $1.

In a small village in Forfarshire an old lady had a ticket in her window which said, "House for Sail." A gentleman, noticing the word was mis-spelt, entered the shop to inform the lady. "When is this house going to sail?" he inquired. Old Lady—Oh, finever ye can raise the win."

A man's wife should always be the same, especially to her husband; but if she is weak and nervous, and uses Carter's Iron Pills, each cannot be, for they will make her 'feel like a different person,' at least so they all say, and their husbands say so, too.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

The Free Library Books.

Kindly allow me space to set myself right before the public re the discussion of the Free Library question. Rev. W. M. Roger insinuates that I am speaking for the unbelieving or what he calls the infidel class. I am on infidel, as Mr. Roger would soon find out if he were to pay a visit to my home, where he would find the Eible on my table, which is daily read, and my library well stocked with righteous and liberal literature. I love them both and take Biblical advice, "prove all things; hold fast that which is good." I have no tear for myself or others in following this advice. For myself it makes me have higher conceptions of God, clearer views as to my duty to humanity and of the ultimate destiny of man as the offspring of God.

I am very much pleased to stand corrected in regard to ministerial exemption from taxation. "The world does move." It would move faster if the heavy hand of superstition did not press so heavily, retarding its progress. If Mr. Roger will inform the board how much he has contributed towards the 750 volumes we have by hard work got together we will refund the money. We do not invite your young people to come and read what you call objectionable books, neither does any one try to persuade any one to read these books. They are there to supply a need, and whoever needs them may read them.

I would ask Mr. Roger why is the Mechanics' Institute more responsible than our own elected Library Board. The very assertion that they are so, on the face of it is a slur on the labor and other organizations which are represented on that board. Why did not the association know before taking action? They would have been welcomed personally and their contributions received graftefully. They, as citizens, have a perfect right to investigate and criticise what we do. But their criticism will only be taken for what it is worth, the same as any other pman's. There has been no remodeling of the board now is that the societies I represented are not aliberal character since I left than before. The only reason I new combinations and modded into peculiar forms.

Men and women—the old and young—are not all blessed with vigorous, strong, robust life. Unfortunately for Canada, we have our thousands who barely move and breathe; they do not possess that vigor, strength and health which means true life. Can any same individual assert that the weary, tired, broken-down, nervous, sleepless and dyspeptic man or woman enjoys life as they should? We know that many oi them are weary and tired of lives of suffering.

Hold I suffering mortals. Do not despair; maintain courage and hope; there is rescue for you if you wish to walk the pleasant highway of health and true life. Know you not that Paine's Celery Compound banishes the foes by which you are beset? Are you not aware that this remedy emancipates the slaves of disease and suffering?

You have been seeking for freedom from pain for many years; physicians and advertised remedies have deceived you. Now you have the true agency of health offered, will you accept it? We guarantee cure, satisfaction and new life; can the power of mortal man promise greater blessings?

Paine's Celery Compound is a conqueror; its triumphs are multitudinous and wonderful. Try it, and know what true life means.

RAN AWAY WITH THE RHINOCEROS Miss June Shook Her Sides at the Joke on the Other Pachyderm.

NEW YORK, May 30.—The rhinoceros a the Central Park menagerie was removed on Sunday from her old quarters in the carnivora house to larger apartments in the elephant house. The change was pre-scribed by Director Smith, who found that the animal, whose age is said to be 60 years, had become ill natured and weak in her legs from her eight years' residence in a narrow pen.

her legs from her eight years' residence in a narrow pen.
She had been a terror to her keepers, and to handle her was a big job. A great box was made, and after much punching and pushing the animal was gotten in it. She raised strong objections, but unwittingly backed into the box, which was promptly boarded up. Then the box was put on wheels and the Barnum elephant Juno was hitched to it. Juno thought it great and ran away, striking terror to the heart of the imprisoned rhinoceros. Keeper Snyder stopped Juno before great damage was done. She was led back to her house, and the truck was pulled along for the rest of the truck was pulled along for the rest of the way by park laborers.
