A Detective's Confession.

At the recent trial of a case in the Berlin, Ont., Police Court against F. C. Bond, druggist, for breach of the Medical Act, Detective Webb, of this city, made the following admissions while under cross-examination: "I am a detective for the College of Physicians in Ontario. It is my duty to look after all parties who are violating the Medical Act. In the course of my duty I go to drug stores—sometimes I have to color things very highly—in other words, I have to stretch the truth, and I have done this several times. I have led people by my statements to believe that I was worse than I really was." The case was dismissed. The detective's evidence has been published by the papers of Berlin as a curiosity.

At the Grand Opera House to-morrow (Tuesday) evening Mr. Charles L. Davis (Alvin Joslin) will appear in his new play, "One of the Old Stock." The Syracuse Standard says: "Charles L. Davis appeared to a large audience last night at the Wieting in his new play called 'One of the Old Stock.' As Mr. Davis was seen in the character of Alvin Joslin, which he has made very familiar to the public by repeated performances in it, old friends and admirers were as usual delighted. The new play is better than the original and is presented with a great deal of pretension to seenic effect. Mr. Davis is, however, the feature of it which seems to go, and he certainly made his audience laugh all last night. The company gives adequate support."

On Saturday night shortly after 11 o'clock the veteran soldier, General Renwick, succumbed to the grim conqueror, Death. The General's demise adds another to the long list of victims, who have fallen from the effect of the grippe. When that contagion was at its helght the General was attacked by it, but after a short indisposition he concluded that he had shaken it off and as many others have done he ventured out before he was fully restored to health. About a month ago he went to Lindsay on legal business, and while there suffered a relapse, from the effects of which he never recovered. William Turnbull Renwick was born at Berwick, England, in 1802, and was the oldest general in the British service. He attended school in England until 15 years old, when he entered the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, where he remained for six years. From 1823 until 1851 he spent his time in surveying in Wales and Ireland. In 1851 he was ordered to the West Indies, and was there for about seven years. Thence he went to England and thence to Ireland. He came to Canada in 1841 as senior major of the Royal Engineers. On coming here he A Veteran Gone.
