Adam Graeme, of Mossgray.

She had been out, watching the sun as he shed a golden mist over the dark mass of youder hill, where it stands out boldly into the firth, a strong sentinel, keeping watch upon the sea; gleaming in the mid-waters of the est ary, gleaming in the wet sand and shining pools of the deep hay, and throwing out the sunless hillock at the river's mouth, with its little tower and quiet nouses, in hold rolief against the far-away mountain, and its mantle of streaming gold. The wonderful sky in the west, the broad bed of the firth, the sunset and its noble scene—there was an enjoyment in those to the delicate soil of Helen, which duller natures have not in the greatest personal blessings of the world.

And now, with her pale check resting on our young ladies: it's Miss Mansfield, you know, that's going to Calcutta, and she's old—she is near eighteen, I am sure—and she sighs, but when Miss Swinton spoke to her about it, she said she was only drawing a long breath. I think," said Hope disconsolately, "that the people in Fendie are very dull and sad now; for everybody draws long breaths."

lately, "that the people in Fondie are very dull and sad now; for everybody draws long breaths."

"Have you seen so many, Hope?" said Helen, with an uneasy flush upon her face, and with some evident interest in the question; those constantly moving features were sad tell-tales.

"I mean just the people I care about," said Hope; "there is poor William, I do not know what ails William—for he sat in the dark like you, last night, and will always lean his head upon his hands, and sgh—sigh—and my mother—I wish you would not all be so sad."

Helen Buchanan turned round to examine the contents of her work-basket. Her slonder finguer was very slightly drawn up; something almost imperceptible, like the faint touch of wind upon leaves, passed over her; you could not tell what it was, thouch you could read its awift expression as clearly as written words. Pride-sympathy—a consciousness that moved her heart and yet made it firmer; but Hope's piece of incidental information did not sadden the face of Helen.

Among the pains and aches cured with marvelous rapidity with Dr. Thomas Eclectric Oil, is ear ache. The young are especially subject to it, and the desirability of this Oil as a family remedy is enhanced by the fact that it is admirably adapted not only to the above ailment, but also to the hurts, disorders of the bowels, and affections of the throat, in which the young are specially subject.
