

sun and the Sun of Righteousness which illumines the spiritual life. As one is necessary to make the day a success, so the other is necessary to make a success of the life in this world. He also dwelt upon a man's responsibility for the opportunities that he has of doing good.

The second speaker was John J. Cornell. He stated that he understood the object of the meeting was to allow the young people to take an active part, and he hoped that the older people would not take too much of the time. He then talked for a few minutes on inspiration. The inspiration which the minister has is just the same as comes to every other person. There is nothing mysterious about it. It is the prompting of conscience to do our duty. Men too often mistake human imagination for divine inspiration.

Following these remarks was a very earnest prayer by Joel Birdsall, in which he very feelingly remembered the young people and prayed that the divine Spirit would guide them aright.

Maria Synnesveldt made a short speech, in which she reminded the young folks of the uncertainty of life and the certainty of death, and the importance of doing life's work well.

Davis Furnas talked for a few minutes on the importance of doing some good each day. Do well the work of each day, and there will be no cause for regret.

"Count that day lost whose low descending sun, Finds by thy hand no worthy action done."

Brief speeches were made by Martha Kennard, John L. Thomas, Anna Vaughan, Julia Underwood, Jesse Wilson, Geo. R. Thorpe, Elizabeth Davis, Ruth Kennard, Emma Kennard, Eliza Morris, and others whose names the reporter was not able to learn.

Anna M. Starr spoke of the importance of seeking the Lord early in life. It will take nothing from your earthly happiness. She also spoke of the importance of always being trustworthy, and of young men forming good business habits, and of young women forming good domestic habits, and of having proper ideas of what life really is.

Jesse K. James spoke of the importance of young people having high ideals of character and of selecting proper examples for imitation.

John J. Cornell appeared in supplication, in which he prayed for those who might be neglecting or resisting the promptings of the Spirit.

Prayer by Rebecca D. Wilson.

Maltilda Underwood spoke very feelingly for some minutes on her great concern for the spiritual welfare of the young.

Prayer by William W. Foulke.

After a few moments of silence the meeting adjourned, having been a very profitable session.

FIFTH-DAY MORNING.

The report of the Representative Committee for the past year was read. Memorials were read of Mary Evans, Fanny Taylor, and Sarah A. Hutton. The Committee on Indian Affairs reported very little active work done. Fifty dollars were appropriated to this work. The Philanthropic Committee's report was read by George R. Thorpe. It reported sub-committees at work on temperance, corrupt literature, prisons and asylums, compulsory education and arbitration. An appropriation of one hundred dollars was made for this work next year. One hundred dollars was also appropriated for the use of the F. D. S. Association.
