

satisfied of all the advantages that must accrue to the members of the Profession both individually and collectively, by the establishment of such an association, and convinced of the facility with which these anticipated benefits may be secured, by the contemplated new arrangements, does not hesitate again to invite the serious attention of its Medical brethren to the project, and to solicit their hearty co-operation. An opportunity is now afforded to the Profession in Canada, of commencing a great and glorious work; let it not be lost, but rather, let our single ineffectual and scattered elements for action be concentrated and amalgamated into an integral, powerful, and efficient body. When the results are considered, surely the annual expense of Membership ought not to be permitted to present itself as a barrier. There are yet many things that require to be done for the Medical Profession, which none but themselves can do; there is much to be done for the country, which can never be done except by Medical men. To effect these, individual efforts must fail as they have always hitherto done—while united, they must succeed. Let us keep in view the Provincial Medical and Surgical Association of England, and let us emulate its members, in their determination to place the Medical profession here on that footing, which they are making such rapid strides in the land of our forefathers in obtaining for it there.
