Pakha and Houei Nha were under the control of Laotian National Army from June 1955 until mid August 1955. As a result of clashes between the two Parties the Laotian National Army withdrew, subsequently they counter attacked in September 1955 and reoccupied the two posts. There was never any direct threat to Pathi and Hua Xieng which remained in the hands of the Laotian National Army and Pathet Lao respectively. Letters were sent to both Parties forwarding the Commission's findings, deploring these incidents and requesting that the status quo with regard to these posts should be maintained pending the reaching of a mutually agreed solution.

Suspended.

The occupation of the new position was not considered to be a violation of the Geneva Agreement but it did produce a dangerous situation as the troops were located at such close quarters that they could easily fire at each other. In the interest of maintaining peace as an interim arrangement the Commission requested the Pathet Lao to consider withdrawing this post to an area from where there would be no possibility of the troops firing at each other. The Pathet Lao replied that the Royal Laotian Government post at Boun Neua was illegally occupied since it was located in the Pathet Lao concentration area, that theirs was a position of self defence and that no incident would occur in the absence of Royal Laotian Government provocation.
