LABOR MEN CHANGE THEIR PARTY'S NAME

Convention in Labor Temple Saturday, and Laber Questions Discussed.

Speakers Declare in Favor of Principles Prevailing in

Largely attended the convention of the Greater Toronto Labor Party held session at the Labor Temple all Saturday afternoon and evening, the election of officers The recent by-election in Northeast Toronto was among the principal themes of discussion, and at the evening session James T. Gunn, James H. Ballantyne and Mrs. Hector Prenter addressed the meeting upon the problems of reconstruction and upon the advisability of following in the footsteps of the British Labor party undr Arthur Henderson.

Reports were presented from the treasurer, Roy Hughes; from the secretary, R. H. Amos, and from John Doggett, agent of William Varley, the Labor candidate at the Northeast Toronto by-election. It was shown that all the expenses of the campaign had been fully met, the party branches and various labor unions having donated a total of $1180.56.

R. H. Amos, recording secretary, in his annual report, stated that many labor men were dissatisfied with both the great organized political parties, and that it was only a matter of time, coupled with active propaganda and intelligent organization, when the Labor party in Canada would exercise a larger influence upon the destinies of the Dominion. The party had been fortunate in its choice of a candidate, said the secretary. William Varley was not only a bona fide labor union man, but had also literally gone over the top for his King and country in the military sense of the term.

Among the revisions to the constitution considered by the convention was the changing of the name of the party to the Independent Labor party, so as to avoid confusion in future as to the aims of the party, which is practically part and parcel of the I.L.P. of Ontario. The committee also recommended that any branch twelve months in arrears should forfeit representation on the general executive of the party.
